1. Provide the rationale for proposing this course:

One of the core areas of study in the Sociology Department at the Ohio State University is Comparative Social Change, which explicitly includes social movements as a subtopic. However, we have no social movements seminar at the 700 or 800 level. This course seeks to familiarize graduate students with the major theoretical perspectives in the field, the central topics of interest to movement scholars, and the ways that researchers go about empirically examining important social movement processes. The topics dealt with in this course are expected to be of interest to students studying in the areas of political sociology, social change, organizations, and inequality (race, gender, and class).
