

Given the interest in education as a major at the undergraduate level, few courses exist that provide undergraduate with a foundational understanding of the unique teaching and learning needs found in urban contexts. This course will fill that void. Many students planning to pursue a graduate degree in Education or planning to major in medicine, social work, journalism, or other disciplines could benefit from taking a course focused on urban educational contexts and becoming acquainted with some of the inquiry methodologies in the field of study.