Comments

 Although some of the content of this course is covered in other department courses (3252, 3351), the department consensus is that this course merits its own number. Unlike the other two courses, it focuses exclusively on visual representations. It also takes a comparative approach to the material, contrasting representations from many countries.

Dear Garett, yes the Historical Study statement is an oversight. Our apologies. The correct syllabus has been attached now! Thank you!

12/19/13 - the revised GE Course Assessment Plan has been attached.

1/14/14 - the updated "Statement of Qualitative Difference" has been attached. The enrollment limit of 25 is now clearly stated in items 4 and 5. (by Miller, Natascha on 01/24/2014 01:00 PM)

- see 1-23 email to K Byram (by Hogle, Danielle Nicole on 01/23/2014 02:02 PM)
- See 11-27 e-mail to N Miller. (by Vankeerbergen, Bernadette Chantal on 11/27/2013 02:36 PM)
- I noticed that the syllabus has a statement and rationale for how the course meets GE in Historical Study in addition to VPA and C&I. Is that an oversight? (by Heysel, Garett Robert on 11/06/2013 04:07 PM)

Representations and Memory of the Holocaust in Film

(5) a. Fulfills GE Visual and Performing Arts

Goals:

Students evaluate significant works of art in order to develop capacities for aesthetic and historical response and judgment; interpretation and evaluation; critical listening, reading, seeing, thinking, and writing; and experiencing the art and reflecting on that experience.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

- 1. Students analyze, appreciate, and interpret significant works of art.
- 2. Students engage in informed observation and/or active participation in a discipline within the visual, spatial, and performing arts.

In lectures, discussions, papers, and exams, students will analyze and learn to interpret major films dealing with the Holocaust, thereby investigating various modes of human thought, culture, and expression. Students will deal in a sophisticated fashion with visual materials pertaining to the Holocaust and its fate in postwar Europe and the United States. The course will familiarize students with how these films have contributed to our understanding of a complex phenomenon of the Second World War and how the directors have coped with the thorny issues of representing something that many people consider to be unrepresentable.

b. Fulfills GE Diversity (Global Studies)

Goals:

Students understand the pluralistic nature of institutions, society, and culture in the United States and across the world in order to become educated, productive, and principled citizens.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

- 1. Students understand some of the political, economic, cultural, physical, social, and philosophical aspects of one or more of the world's nations, peoples and cultures outside the U.S.
- 2. Students recognize the role of national and international diversity in shaping their own attitudes and values as global citizens.

Students in this course will deal with a significant amount of material from non-US culture and come to understand the traditions of different nations and their reactions to the Holocaust. They will evaluate how culturally-specific ideas influence the character of human beliefs, the perception of reality, and the norms which guide human behavior. They will come to understand the reactions of individuals in different countries to atrocities committed in Europe (mostly in Poland by Germans), and recognize how these attitudes inform contemporary discussions.

- (6) Course Description: The Holocaust has been a tremendously important topic in postwar cinema. There are major films in almost every major European country dealing with the Holocaust, directed by some of the foremost directors and featuring some of the greatest actors and actresses, and some of the most innovative filmic techniques. The Holocaust has been represented in various filmic forms: documentary, drama, comedy; indeed, there are probably more films on the Holocaust and more footage of the Holocaust placed in films than any other historical event outside of World War II. Yet the question of representation, in particular adequate representation is one that is continuously raised and debated. In this course we will identify the complex interplay between history and filmic representation in connection with a major event of the twentieth century. Through examining films along with historical documents, as well as cultural and theoretical writings this course aims at teaching students how film as a unique art form deals with intricate historical phenomena and substantive issues of ethics. Films will be screened outside of class. Taught in English.
- (7) Required Course Materials: I would like to see about having these films available for streaming. I will use the Secured Video Library for them. Films will occasionally be supplemented with written materials: for example, I will put on reserve in the library the Diary of Anne Frank so that students can read sections of it along with the viewing of the film. The same holds true for Lanzmann's Shoah, which is largely a transcript of the film.
- (8) Assignments: Average viewing per week will be approximately two hours. The assignments for the course are as follows:
- 1. One short paper (4-6 pages), due after the eighth week of classes
- 2. Students will be required to be part of a group presentation. In these presentations students, in groups of three or four, will view an additional film about the Holocaust and present it to the class. These presentations will occur after the eighth week of the course.

3. A final examination

4. Attendance and participation

- (9) Grading based on the following percentages: paper (25%); presentation (30%); class participation (10%); final examination (35%).
- (10) Grading Scale:

| 100-93 A | 79–77 C+ |            |
|----------|----------|------------|
| 92–90 A- | 76–73 C  |            |
| 89–87 B+ | 72–70 C- |            |
| 86–83 B  | 69–67 D+ |            |
| 82–80 B- | 66–63 D  | below 63 E |

- (11) Final examination during the regularly scheduled finals period.
- (12) Class attendance policy: Students are expected to attend class, and will be penalized for failure to attend more than three sessions per term.

This is a GEC course in the category Literature.

Goals:

Students evaluate significant texts in order to develop capacities for aesthetic and historical response and judgment; interpretation and evaluation; and critical listening, reading, seeing, thinking, and writing.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

- 1. Students analyze, interpret, and critique significant literary works.
- 2. Through reading, discussing, and writing about literature, students appraise and evaluate the personal and social values of their own and other cultures.

It also counts toward GEC category Diversity, Global Studies.

Goals:

Students understand the pluralistic nature of institutions, society, and culture in the United States and across the world in order to become educated, productive, and principled citizens.

Expected Learning Outcomes: Global Studies

- 1. Students understand some of the political, economic, cultural, physical, social, and philosophical aspects of one or more of the world's nations, peoples and cultures outside the U.S.
- 2. Students recognize the role of national and international diversity in shaping their own attitudes and values as global citizens.

Course Description

The content of this course will focus on two related sets of questions. First, it will provide an overview of the historical events we call the Holocaust, including their pre-history and their aftermath. In doing so, it will address some questions commonly asked about these events: What happened? How could such a thing occur? What was the experience of those who lived and died during its course? In addition to expanding your historical knowledge, this factual information will provide the necessary background for discussing some of the burning questions that have occupied philosophy, literary studies, aesthetics, and ethical theories over the last sixty years. What capacity do humans have for evil, and for good? Who should be held accountable for such crimes against humanity? Is it possible to represent and share experiences that push the limits of being human? If so, are there limits to the kinds of representations people should create? What are they? What responsibilities do descendants of both victims and perpetrators have? How have members of different societies or cultures (e.g. Germans, Americans) answered these questions?

Required texts

Films will be viewed in class. The five required books are available for purchase at SBX Book Exchange, 1806 N. High St. Most of the films and books are also available on reserve in Thompson Library course reserves, or the Billy Ireland Cartoon Library. A few additional readings will be made available in the content section of Carmen.

Assignments

Attendance and participation: Our course will be participating in a pilot of TopHat Monocle, a responseware platform designed to promote student engagement and instructor/student communication. In our very large class, it will give everyone the chance to participate and ask questions. Students can use any mobile or wireless device; we will track attendance and participation through the system and will assign grades accordingly. Details will follow in Week 2, as we begin to phase in the system.

Essays: Two short essays (400-700 words) will require you to synthesize information about issues connected with several course texts; that is, you will be asked not only to repeat information, but also to analyze or interpret it. To do so, you will need to present a coherent argument that relates the texts to each other and provides specific examples from each text to support your assertions. In my lectures, I will analyze and interpret individual texts, and sometimes relate them to each other, so my presentations will give you a good start on answering these questions. But to receive an "A", you will also need to demonstrate your own, independent thinking. You may submit the essays as hard copies or to the appropriate Carmen dropbox.

Reading/viewing quizzes: Six times during the quarter, we will begin class with a quiz on recently assigned texts and films. These quizzes are designed to reward those who complete the reading and viewing assignments, by asking for information about major events and characters. I will try not to ask about minor details, but please pay attention to important figures' names. The lowest quiz grade will be dropped. Because of the nature of the quizzes, no make-ups will be given. If you miss a quiz due to an excused absence (for example, a documented illness or family emergency), it will be dropped. Quizzes missed during unexcused absences will be graded as "0" (or count as your dropped quiz grade).

Final exam: The final exam will consist of several short answer questions and an essay. The short answer questions will elicit information about the texts, films, and issues covered in the course. We will discuss these in the weeks before the final. The essay prompt will resemble those from the essay assignments, and I will distribute it a week before the exam, so you will have plenty of time to plan your answer.

Policies:

Academic Misconduct:

It is the responsibility of the Committee on Academic Misconduct to investigate or establish procedures for the investigation of all reported cases of student academic misconduct. The term "academic misconduct" includes all forms of student academic misconduct wherever committed; illustrated by, but not limited to, cases of plagiarism and dishonest practices in connection with examinations. Instructors shall report all instances of alleged academic misconduct to the committee (Faculty Rule 335-5-487). For additional information, see the Code of Student Conduct (http://studentaffairs.osu.edu/info_for_students/csc.asp).

Disability Services:

Students with disabilities that have been certified by the Office for Disability Services will be appropriately accommodated and should inform the instructor as soon as possible of their needs. The Office for Disability Services is located in 150 Pomerene Hall, 1760 Neil Avenue, telephone 292-3307, TDD 292-0901; http://www.ods.ohio-state.edu/

A GE rationale that answers specifically the following questions:

- a) How do the course objectives address the GE category expected learning outcomes? The expected learning outcomes for visual and performing arts are first: "students analyze, appreciate, and interpret significant works of art." The works we will be viewing are major works from major filmmakers. We will be interpreting and analyzing them in particular from the perspective of their techniques of representation of the Holocaust. We will treat films as an art form and respect the uniqueness of the medium in our discussions and analyses. In the process students will come to appreciate the sophistication of the filmmakers in their work. The second expected learning outcome is that "students engage in informed observation and/or active participation in a discipline within a visual, spatial, and performing arts." I have never had students produce films themselves in this course, although it would be an option if I were approached about it. Instead, students will learn to deal with visual art, analyze it, and appreciate it. Their assignments will force them to do an independent group analysis in addition to individual written analyses.
- b) How do the readings assigned address the GE category expected learning outcomes? There will be few reading assignments; most of the students' time outside of class will involve viewing films. These films will be analyzed and interpreted in class, either in lectures or in discussions or by students themselves in small groups. They will have to come to terms with visual representation if they are going to succeed in the course.
- c) How do the topics assigned address the GE category expected learning outcomes? The topics relate directly to the films and the representations in the films. They relate to the analysis and interpretation of the films' technical and artistic methods of achieving particular effects.
- d) How do the written assignments address the GE category expected learning outcomes? The written assignments ask the students to engage in analysis and interpretation of the films' techniques and the implications of these techniques for their representations of the Holocaust.
- e) How does the course aim to sharpen the students' response, judgment, and evaluation skills? They will sharpen these skills through the students' exposure to different ideas and perspectives, through their articulation of their own ideas and perspectives, and through their active interchange in discussions that will challenge ideas and perspectives they currently hold. The papers and the presentation will be designed to have students argue a perspective, knowing that there are other valid perspectives on these issues.

4. A GE assessment plan etc.

- a) Description of the specific methods etc. I will be using both direct and indirect methods of assessment. I plan to survey students periodically in the course to see what is working for them and what is not working. The written assignments will ask students to "analyze, appreciate, and interpret significant [films]," so I should be able to assess how successful I have been in meeting the first ELO from an examination of the results of the first essay. To conduct ongoing evaluations of individual students' engagement in "informed observation and/or active participation in a discipline" (ELO 2), I occasionally like to give the students a quick written question, ask them to write on it for five minutes, have them pass it in, and use it as the basis for discussion. For example, I might ask about the use of black and white filming in Schindler's List, and what it adds to the overall effect of the film; what is the visual impact, and how does this visual impact affect our interpretation of an historical event. This sort of method allows me to see how well students are understanding filmic representation and film as a medium different from other media in which the Holocaust plays a role. I would like to remain flexible and be able to change my delivery of the material according to what works best for the students in achieving the desired learning outcomes.
- b) Explanation of the level of student achievement expected. My definition of success for students will include (1) an understanding of the various ways filmmakers, in particular, have represented an event many believe is unrepresentable and (2) how well students come to understand how the particular medium of film and film as a unique art form deal with difficult historical representation and ethical issues. I will quantify these two items of student achievement as follows: If 75% of students achieve a grade of B or better on the essay and 75% score an 85% or higher on the short written exercise, I will consider that the goal has been attained. I believe most students will be able to achieve this sort of understanding, and I will have to rethink my methods if more than a handful do not accomplish this much in their written work and contributions to discussions.
- c) Description of follow-up/feedback process. GLL collects final evaluations, and I will certainly consult them to see what the student response has been and to alter methods for more successful attainment of the goals of the course. But I do believe that having indicators during the course, as I have stated above, is essential, and will implement changes according to the feedback I have.

GE rationale and assessment for German 3254H: Diversity (Global Studies)

A GE rationale that answers specifically the following questions:

- a) How do the course objectives address the GE category expected learning outcomes? The first learning outcome relates to students understanding "some of the political, economic, cultural, physical, social, and philosophical aspects of one or more of the world's nations, peoples, and cultures outside the U.S." The films for the course are drawn from various countries outside the US: Germany, France, and Italy are represented, but in the student presentations Polish and Czech films will also be included, as well as possibly Israeli film. Students will come to understand the films as responses of different cultures, but also the history told in the film about the Holocaust as a response from different countries with different cultural and historical traditions. The second learning outcome is that students "recognize the role of national and international diversity in shaping their own attitudes and values as global citizens." The films will certainly emphasize national diversity, but also the common humanity of individuals in the Holocaust. Students will understand historical phenomena as having a global aspect.
- b) How do the readings assigned address the GE category expected learning outcomes? There will be more viewings than readings, but they will contribute to the learning outcomes because they are drawn from different countries with different traditions (also different traditions in filmmaking).
- c) How do the topics address the GE category expected learning outcomes? The topics related to the films and the course objectives. They will emphasize the international aspect of the Holocaust.
- d) How do the written assignments address the GE category expected learning outcomes? The written assignments call for analysis and interpretation of various films, and there will be comparative questions asking students to evaluate the response of a film from one country against another.

4. A GE assessment plan etc.

a) Description of the specific methods etc. I will be using both direct and indirect methods of assessment. I plan to survey students periodically in the course to see what is working for them and what is not working. The written assignments will be focused on the learning outcomes, and I should be able to assess how successful I have been from an examination of the results of the first essay. I occasionally like to give the students a quick written question, ask them to write on it for five minutes, have them pass it in, and use it as the basis for discussion. For example, I might ask about the lyricism in The Garden of the Finzi Continis as part of an Italian cinematic and cultural tradition, or about the ways in with Night and Fog reflect on specifically French historical, cultural, and political concerns (ELO 1). This sort of method allows me to see how well students are doing with the material assigned. I would like to remain flexible and be able to change my delivery of the material according to what works best for the students in achieving the desired learning outcomes. In their written assignments and oral presentations it will be important for students to demonstrate that they understand cultural differences that play a role in the film representations.

- b) Explanation of the level of student achievement expected. My definition of success for students will include (1) an understanding of the various ways filmic representation of historical events is dependent on national traditions and different cultural perspectives (ELO 1) and (2) an understanding for how historical representations and understandings, including those of their own place and time, depend on cultural and national perspective and changes (ELO 2). I will quantify these two items of student achievement as follows: If 75% of students achieve a grade of B or better on the essay and 75% score an 85% or higher on the short written exercise, I will consider that the goal has been attained. I believe most students will be able to achieve this sort of understanding, and I will have to rethink my methods if more than a handful do not accomplish this much in their written work and contributions to discussions.
- c) Description of follow-up/feedback process. GLL collects final evaluations, and I will certainly consult them to see what the student response has been and to alter methods for more successful attainment of the goals of the course. But I do believe that having indicators during the course, as I have stated above, is essential, and will implement changes according to the feedback I have.

Statement of Qualitative Difference

- 1. Please see the discussion of GE Goals and Expected Learning Outcomes in the syllabus and GE rationale.
- 2. Students in the proposed Honors course will be exposed to films from a broader chronological and geographical time span than is the case in the comparable non-Honors course. Lectures and, particularly, discussions will delve more deeply into complicated issues such as the limits of representation in art and the relationship between aesthetics, politics, and culture.
- 3. Lectures will expose students to the nature of scholarship—and, importantly in this case, the nature of debates—within the field. Students will be introduced to methods of filmic analysis in class lectures and discussions and will be expected to apply these as they watch the films, discuss them in class, and write papers and presentations about them.
- 4. Students in this small Honors course, limited to an enrollment of 25, will 1) write a longer, more detailed analytical paper on a film than students in the comparable course do 2) be responsible for researching and interpreting a film in order to present it to their peers, a task not part of the comparable course and 3) be expected to contribute actively to course discussions on a daily basis, not an expectation of the comparable course. Because this course is much smaller than the comparable course, the instructor will be able to provide much more extensive feedback on all assignments, and to grade class participation on a qualitative basis.
- 5. Much more significant exchange between faculty and students will be able to take place during daily course discussions in this class (which is limited to an enrollment of 25) than in the comparable, non-Honors course (which has an enrollment of 150).
- 6. Course discussions will be conducted in an atmosphere that requires students to respect others' viewpoints and ideas while encouraging them to challenge and further develop those viewpoints and ideas. Establishing an atmosphere in which all students feel comfortable and confident exchanging ideas is next to impossible in a class the size of the comparable course. Group presentations will allow students to work together to develop insights and a sophistication of presentation that would not be achievable by students working alone. Again, making time for group presentations is not possible in the larger course.
- 7. Both the short paper and the presentation will require creative thinking as students develop and present their interpretations of the films under discussion. Only papers and presentations that show evidence of independent, creative thought will be assessed as successful. While the comparable course requires such thought for highly successful work, work that does not show significant independent thought may be deemed satisfactory.
- 8. The foundations of this course rest in interdisciplinary debates (spanning history; philosophy; and literary, film, and art historical studies) about representations of the - Holocaust. Drawing as it does from a number of national traditions in its film selections, it also cuts across divisions common within university departments.

- 9. The assignments that require independent thinking and cogent presentation; the lectures that will be delivered at an intellectually demanding level; the daily discussions of complicated and sensitive topics; the intensive exchanges between students and faculty in those discussions; and the reckoning with the difficult material on an analytical level will all require a high level of intellectual output. Please see the items above for how the intellectual output required differs from the comparable course.
