Program Learning Goals

Note: these are required for all undergraduate degree programs and majors now, and will be required for all graduate and professional degree programs in 2012. Nonetheless, all programs are encouraged to complete these now.

Program Learning Goals

- Students acquire an understanding of the institutional frameworks governing human rights, including international law, international organizations, and civil society movements.
- Students acquire an understanding of the theoretical and philosophical debates about the meanings of human rights.
- Students develop capacity to understand and evaluate practical debates over the methods, motivations, and consequences of human rights action, including but not limited to questions of policy-making, fieldwork, and media and artistic representation.

Assessment

Assessment plan includes student learning goals, how those goals are evaluated, and how the information collected is used to improve student learning. An assessment plan is required for undergraduate majors and degrees. Graduate and professional degree programs are encouraged to complete this now, but will not be required to do so until 2012.

Is this a degree program (undergraduate, graduate, or professional) or major proposal? Yes

Does the degree program or major have an assessment plan on file with the university Office of Academic Affairs? No

DIRECT MEASURES (means of assessment that measure performance directly, are authentic and minimize mitigating or intervening factors)

Classroom assignments

- Pre- and post-testing

INDIRECT MEASURES (means of assessment that are related to direct measures but are steps removed from those measures)

Surveys and Interviews

- Student survey

USE OF DATA (how the program uses or will use the evaluation data to make evidence-based improvements to the program periodically)

- Analyze and report to accrediting organization

Program Specializations/Sub-Plans

If you do not specify a program specialization/sub-plan it will be assumed you are submitting this program for all program specializations/sub-plans.

Dear Council on Academic Affairs Members,

I am pleased to submit for your consideration a proposal for an undergraduate minor program in Human Rights. A distinctive strength of this program lies in the variety of disciplinary and interdisciplinary perspectives and methodological approaches to which students will be exposed. The collaboration of faculty across disciplines in developing this program ensures its quality.

The program's interdisciplinarity and flexibility will appeal to many students across the university as an important complement to their major programs. Given the strong and growing communities of faculty researchers in human rights, I support the undergraduate minor in Human Rights, and I encourage its approval.

If you have questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

Gifford Weary

A PROPOSAL FOR AN INTERDISCIPLINARY MINOR IN HUMAN RIGHTS

To: ASC Curriculum Committee

From: Anthony Mughan, Director, Undergraduate International Studies Program (UISP)

Background

As the world has become more complex and the inherent diversity of its constituent populations more salient and, often, controversial, academia, governments, national and international organizations, private foundations, and the like have increasingly focused their attention on the often-contested rights of individuals and groups, and especially of minorities whether they be defined by economics, politics, social or cultural circumstances, sexuality, or disability. What rights do these individuals and groups actually have, what rights should they enjoy, and how can the situation be remedied when there is a discrepancy between the two? These questions are usually addressed under the rubric of human rights, which are basically held by advocates to be freedoms to which individuals are entitled simply by virtue of being human. Their basis is respect for the principle of individual freedom and dignity and, as such, human rights are held to be universal. They are guaranteed freedoms to which everyone is entitled – no matter whom they are or where they live – simply because they are alive. This proposal envisages the creation of a Human Rights minor within the Undergraduate International Studies Program (UISP) whose focus will be the theory and practice of human rights on both a national and global scale. This minor will be independent of the Program's track structure.

Rationale

Human rights is not only a practice, but also an emergent and increasingly diverse field of academic study. What forms do human rights take? Which of them are widely accepted and which widely contested? What are the bases of advocacy and contestation for different kinds of rights? What are the implications for individuals and the community of the denial or granting of rights to individuals and groups? This minor provides students with the opportunity to explore such questions from a multiplicity of disciplinary, interdisciplinary and methodological perspectives. The disciplinary and interdisciplinary perspectives include anthropology, childhood, culture, disability, economics, folklore, gender, law, literature, political science, public policy, sociology, and refugee and migration studies. The methodological perspectives range widely and include comparative, ethnographic, historical, rhetorical and social scientific approaches, to name but a few.

Ohio State is well-placed to offer a first-class minor in human rights because of the breadth and depth of approaches to this topic that it boasts. Looking at curricula across its departments and colleges, one is struck by the pervasiveness of faculty interested in this topic and of courses dealing with it. In addition, the University has already hosted several interdisciplinary conferences, symposia, and lectures that have been sponsored by Arts and Sciences, the Humanities Institute, the Mershon Center for International Security, and several other academic units. These events were widely attended by students and faculty, and spawned the conversations that led to the design of this minor. Currently lacking, however, is the opportunity to gain a coherent, interdisciplinary perspective on how human rights has shaped the cultural, economic, and political fabric of the modern and contemporary world. The minor intends to fill this void and offer the Ohio State student body the opportunity to engage in the academic study of the dynamic influence of human rights on international and national politics, policy, activism, and culture. It is anticipated that its audience will appeal to students in the various Colleges in the Arts and Sciences as well as in the Colleges of Food, Agricultural, and Environmental Sciences and Social Work.

Curriculum

The proposal is for a 12-hour interdisciplinary minor in human rights. All students will take the same introductory course, which must be passed with a grade of C-, or higher. The remaining 9 credit hours will be satisfied by choosing two courses from one of the two groupings below and one course from the other. The first of them offers an essentially arts and humanities perspective on human rights, while the second offer a social science perspective. To be precise, the proposed curriculum is:

This minor will be open to International Studies (IS) majors, as well as to members of the undergraduate student body as a whole. No course will be allowed to count towards the IS major. In the event that a course were to be required on both this minor and the major, it will count towards the minor and students will be required to substitute for it on their major. All the courses counting towards this minor are approved and already on the books. They are also generally taught by faculty in the departments offering them. Students must maintain a C average in the minor, and no grade lower than C- will count towards the minor.

Administration

The minor will be listed in the OSU Bulletin as “an interdisciplinary minor offered by the Undergraduate International Studies Program.” Individual departments will not be listed so as to allow for the addition and subtraction of courses as circumstances in the contributing units change and/or as new units list courses in the minor. To declare a minor, students will meet with a UISP advisor, with whom they will plan their minor program. Proposed changes to the course content of the minor will be discussed by the Steering Committee that created it (Drs. Wendy Hesford, Anthony Mughan and Amy Shuman) and referred to the UISP Oversight Committee for approval.

Departments wishing to propose courses for the Human Rights minor should submit the following to the UISP Director:

- A fully articulated syllabus for the course(s);
- A statement (two pages maximum) describing how the proposed course(s) would add to the Human Rights minor;
- A description of the history of the proposed course – i.e., is it new? How many times has it been offered before and how often will it be offered in the future?
- A short biography of the faculty member who will have primary responsibility for teaching the course

All the courses that figure, now or in the future, in the proposed minor will have to share the characteristics of being offered regularly, preferably once a year but no less than once every two years.

Competition

To the best we can establish from websites, the only competition for this program in the state of Ohio is the BA in Human Rights Studies at the University of Dayton. No similar programs could be located in surrounding states.

The other programs we have identified are:

University of Connecticut	Human Rights Institute Undergraduate Major and Minor in Human Rights
Columbia University	Institute for the Study of Human Rights Undergraduate Major and Concentration in Human Rights
Barnard College	Joint Major in Human Rights Studies
University of Minnesota	Undergraduate Concentration in Human Rights and Justice Offered through the Global Studies Program

Human Rights Minor Concurrences

Original Request

Rick,

International Studies has collaborated with Professors Wendy Hesford and Amy Shuman of the Department of English to create an interdisciplinary minor in Human Rights. A first draft of our proposal is attached to give you a clear idea of its proposed structure. Comments and suggestions are welcome, but I also need written confirmation of your agreement to the inclusion of the two Political Science courses (4455 and 3460) in the minor. Thanks in advance.

Tony (and Clare)

I believe it is sufficient for me simply to express our concurrence in an email. So, having consulted with a number of our senior faculty, I am happy to agree to the inclusion of the three English courses (4573.02, 4595 and 4597) in the new interdisciplinary minor in Human Rights. As mentioned in an earlier message I do have to stress that this cannot commit us to running any particular course on a particular schedule.

Do let me know if you require this in hard format.

Dear Tony,

I have looked at the proposed IS interdisciplinary minor in Human Rights. It looks attractive, timely, and rigorous. I confirm my agreement to include in this minor both PS 4455 Human Rights and PS 3460 Global Justice.

Sincerely,

Rick

Hi, Tony,

The brief proposal looks fine except please make sure that our courses are listed as Women's, Gender and Sexuality Studies (WGSST), not Women's Studies.

I agree to the inclusion of the four WGSST courses (2305, 3370, 3520 and 3302) in the minor.
