American Civilization to 1877

General Objectives:

- To study American society from earliest times to the abandonment of Reconstruction policies in 1877
- To relate structural changes in society (class, race) to the development of radical ideology (liberty, democracy, and equality), political institutions, and culture
- To view Americans' colonial and national history in the transatlantic context

Specific Objectives:

- To discern persistent regional characteristics of an emergent "nation" of institutions, beliefs, and prevalent values, and the organization of national political parties
- To understand American civilization as a creation by three major racial groups: "red, white, and black"
- To explore four principal radical moments: the Puritan Great Migration, the American Revolution, the Civil War, and Reconstruction

Pedagogical framework:

- This course consists of twenty-five lectures, associated reading assignments in a university text, four writing assignments, two midterms, and a final exam. All of the assignments listed in the schedule are required. Failure to complete any of them will result in a grade of "Incomplete" that will revert to an "E" if the student does not submit the assignment.
- Participation: Attendance is required: the student is allowed a class period of absence, or any portion thereof, and then loses all credit by being absent again. Please do not seek to explain absences or avoid penalties: there are no exceptions. If the professor does not call the roll it does not mean he is not keeping track of attendance. The student is strongly encouraged to visit the office frequently to discuss the course material.
- Reading assignments are required and must be completed before class begins on the date for which the assignment is listed.
- The midterms and final are in class, essay-type tests. If the student does not receive full credit on the in-class midterms, it is essential to meet with the professor and improve his or her understanding of this kind of test, in preparation for the final exam.
- The writing assignments:
 - Writing Assignment I, is to summarize and evaluate in three pages an article from a historical journal to be distributed at the beginning of the term. Each student will have a different article, distributed by lot. The purpose of this assignment is to introduce the student to the process of historical analysis based on documentary evidence.

--Writing Assignment II, is to review in about four pages Eric Foner's Tom Paine and Revolutionary America, according to the specific guidelines to be distributed.

--Writing Assignment III is to analyze in three pages Solomon Northup's Twelve Years A Slave according to guidelines to be distributed.

--The final exam will require a comprehensive essay in response to a question derived from the material of the second half of the course but requiring a demonstration of the student's grasp of the course's main themes, extending back to the beginning. The student should be prepared to write for 108 minutes.

Historical Study

This course fills the GE requirement for Historical Studies.

Goals: Students recognize how past events are studied and how they influence today's society and the human condition.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

1. Students construct an integrated perspective on history and the factors that shape human activity.
2. Students describe and analyze the origins and nature of contemporary issues.
3. Students speak and write critically about primary and secondary historical sources by examining diverse interpretations of past events and ideas in their historical contexts.

Rationale for fulfilling the GE Learning Outcomes for Historical Study:

Goals of the course that fulfill the GE Learning Outcomes in Historical Study: History courses develop students' knowledge of how past events influence today's society and help they influence today's society in the following ways:

1. Critically examine theories of history, and historical methodologies

Students will assess changing interpretations of such subjects as the social and religious impulses in the Old World that incited immigrants to settle in the New World, implications of the tri-racial nature of American society, eighteenth-century imperial warfare, the British context of the American Revolution, early industrialization, and the particular problem of explaining the Civil War and its ambiguous results.

2. Engage with contemporary and historical debates on specific regions, time periods and themes of the human past

Students will assess the distinctive political and social explanations for the founding of each of the thirteen original colonies, and will situate them in their regional contexts; they will confront a variety of theories (social, ideological) as to why the Revolution occurred; and they will grapple with competing explanations of how basic regional and economic issues left unresolved in 1789 haunted the republic down to 1877. Students will also refer whenever possible to comparative and transnational perspectives on immigration and economic development.

3. Through reading in primary and secondary sources and in-depth class discussion, students will access and critically examine social, political, economic, military, gender, religious, ecological, and ethnic/racial/national movements.

For example, students will discuss the emergence and entwining of the abolition and women's rights movements in the 1830s, and why equal racial and gender rights were still not achieved in 1877.

4. Students speak and write critically about primary and secondary historical sources by examining diverse interpretations of past events and ideas in their historical contexts.

Students will carry out in-depth analysis in four papers, one on a secondary work of journal length, two on books of secondary literature, and one on a primary document, to apply the tools they acquire in class. The first assignment is to explore a particular social phenomenon in early America, the second to explore the limits on radicalism in the Revolution, the third on the social structure of the slave South, and the fourth on the experience of a free black man from the North reduced to slavery for twelve years in the South. The student will learn to recognize contingency and the possibility of various outcomes from the same set of circumstances or leaders' personalities, and to develop a hypothesis about why the end result occurred in a given situation.

This course also fills the Social Diversity in the United States GE requirement.

Social Diversity in the United States

1. Students describe and evaluate the roles of such categories as race, gender and sexuality, disability, class, ethnicity, and religion in the pluralistic institutions and cultures of the United States.
2. Students recognize the role of social diversity in shaping their own attitudes and values regarding appreciation, tolerance, and equality of others.

Rationale for fulfilling the GE Learning Outcomes for Social Diversity in the United States:

Goals of the course that fulfill the GE Learning Outcomes: Students will achieve the social diversity goals and learning outcomes by:

1. Completing readings, attending lectures, and participating in class discussions and in-class assignments that will help students understand how the categories of race, gender, class, ethnicity, religion, and nation have shaped peoples' identities and the distribution of power and resources in the U.S. and elsewhere.

In the honors version of this course, the instructor goes beyond the standard History 2001 by lectures, discussions and in-class regular strategy groups that stress the finer distinctions among social categories that made the colonial settlements different from England and from one another. As to race, one seeks to explain the difference between Sea Islands African-American culture from that of Tidewater Virginia. Gender can be demonstrated to have been constructed by the planter class more discriminately in the South than in New England. Class can be explored as more stratified in Virginia than in Connecticut, ethnicity more various in Pennsylvania than in Georgia, religion more heterogeneous in Rhode Island than in New Hampshire, and the student should see how all of these differences structured power in the states after 1776.

2. Describe theories of racial, ethnic, class, national, gender, and religious formation on exams and written assignments.

Students should be expected to be aware, at least, of competing theories of social and political formation on their exams, for example, as to whether racial thinking was shaped primarily by European historical traditions existing for centuries, or more by specific circumstances in the New World.

3. Critically examine theories of race, gender, class, ethnicity, religion, and nation. The student should be able to distinguish critically between competing theories, such as the model of political development suggesting that the Constitution was written and ratified by national consensus, or adopted despite deep regional and intra-state ethnic and other divisions about consolidation of the federal government. Students will also examine racial formation in the context of discussions of slavery, freedom, and conflicts with and among Native Americans.

4. Engage with contemporary and historical debates on race, gender, class, ethnicity, religion, and nation.

The student can be expected to see the extraordinary degree of continuity between the Civil Rights Movement initiated at the time of the Revolution by Paul Cuffe, Prince Hall, and others had a continuous development leading into the final phase associated with names like Rosa Parks and Martin Luther King, Jr.

5. Access and critically examine movements framed by race, gender, class, ethnicity, religion, and/or nation in a wider socio-cultural context.

The student should be asked to keep in mind how historical debates on the various aspects of social and cultural diversity in regard to the nation's past form the roots of contemporary debates. This is a theoretical challenge beyond the typical student in the regular 2001 course

6. Carry out in-depth analysis in several short papers on distinct moments and aspects of racial, nationalist, gender, class, and/or religious mobilization or social movements and their effects.

. The student has the opportunity to write an ambitious analysis of Solomon Northup's book exploring two or more, even all of the diversity factors: ethnic (Northup a northerner), racial (Northup a black), national (the slavery problem in US politics making possible Northup's peculiar tragedy), gender (Northup's frequent exploration of the condition of black and white women in the plantation South), class (the degraded situation of the nonslaveholders in his account), and the abolition movement (as represented by the activity of Samuel Bass).

REQUIRED TEXTS:

Eric Foner, Give Me Liberty: An American History, 3d ed. (New York: Norton, 2008)

Eric Foner, Tom Paine and Revolutionary America (2004)

Solomon Northup, Twelve Years A Slave (LSU edition, 1968)

These texts are available at the campus bookstore. The list of additional reading available on Carmen is attached.

EVALUATION:	Participation:	10%
	Midterm I	10
	Midterm II	15
	Writing Assignment I:	10
	Writing Assignment II:	15
	Writing Assignment III:	15
	Final exam:	25

Grading standards in the Honors course will be adjusted for higher expectations of analytical depth. If the student in the regular course receives an "A" on a midterm for coming up with a good list of events in chronological order leading up to the American Revolution, the Honors student should do that and provide a recognizable thesis about causation that goes beyond mere competent recitation. That is, the Honors student should be asked not just what the Coercive Acts were but exactly which principle upheld in the Bill of Rights of 1689 each of them violated.

SCHEDULE:

Sep. 12: Midterm I
Sep. 19: Writing Assignment I

Oct. 10 Midterm II

Albert Morgan, Yazoo, excerpt on election of William Allen in Ohio
- Nov. 21 Sojourner Truth, Equal Rights Association Speech
Chart of Disfranchisement in the South

Many of the documents are the same for both courses, but expectations of depth and comparative analysis are higher for Honors students. For example, Honors students will be required to evaluate the election returns for 1860 and 1864 very thoroughly, whereas the students in the regular course are expected only to see that Lincoln got votes in the South wherever he was on the ballot in 1860.

In addition, this course includes the same slide shows included in the regular 2001 course, but with at least one more challenging slide or slide show in each session.

For example, on the English Revolution, students in the regular course see portraits of the principals, whereas students in the Honors version will also see slides illustrating and explaining the trial of Charles I and social struggles in the 1640s-50s.

Policies

Classroom decorum:

No electronic devices (cell phones, computers, PAD's, recording devices) may be used in the classroom. Please use ink, not pencil, in writing exams. No talking out of turn, eating, or other disruptive activities. In studying for exams the student is strongly discouraged from participating in study groups and is strongly encouraged, instead, to meet with the professor.

Email communications are not for serious matters or for submitting written work in this course. Visiting or calling the professor's office is preferred.

Academic Misconduct: It is the responsibility of the Committee on Academic Misconduct to investigate or establish procedures for the investigation of all reported cases of student academic misconduct. The term “academic misconduct” includes all forms of student academic misconduct wherever committed; illustrated by, but not limited to, cases of plagiarism and dishonest practices in connection with examinations. Instructors shall report all instances of alleged academic misconduct to the committee (Faculty Rule 3335-5-487). For additional information, see the Code of Student Conduct (http://studentlife.osu.edu/pdfs/csc_12-31-07.pdf).

What is plagiarism?

See http://cstw.osu.edu/writing_center/handouts/research_plagiarism.htm

Disability Statement: Students with disabilities that have been certified by the Office for Disability Services will be appropriately accommodated, and should inform the instructor as soon as possible of their needs. The Office for Disability Services is located in 150 Pomerene Hall, 1760 Neil Ave., tel. 292-3307, www.ods.ohio-state.edu

Launching America: The United States from Colonial Origins (1607)
to the End of Southern Reconstruction (1877)

General Objectives:

- To study American society from earliest times to the federal government's abandonment of Reconstruction in 1877
- To relate structural changes in society (class, race) to the development of radical ideology (liberty, democracy, and equality), political institutions, and culture
- To view Americans' colonial and national history in the transatlantic context

Specific Objectives:

- To discern persistent regional characteristics of an emergent "nation" of institutions, beliefs, and prevalent values, and the organization of national political parties
- To understand American civilization as a creation by three major racial groups: "red, white, and black"
- To explore four principal radical moments: the Puritan Great Migration, the American Revolution, the Civil War, and Reconstruction

Note: This course can be listed to fulfill the GE Diversity: Diversity in the United States requirement or the GE in Historical Study requirement.

PEDAGOGICAL FRAMEWORK:

--This course consists of twenty-five lectures, associated reading assignments in a university text, two writing assignments, two midterms, and a final exam. All of the assignments listed in the schedule are required. Failure to complete any of them will result in a grade of "Incomplete" that will revert to an "E" if the student does not submit the assignment.

The student will not receive credit for the course if s/he does not pass the final examination.

--Participation: Attendance is required: the student is allowed a class period of absence, or any portion thereof, and then loses all credit by being absent again. Please do not seek to explain absences or avoid penalties: there are no exceptions. If the professor does not call the roll it does not mean he is not keeping track of attendance. The student is strongly encouraged to visit the office frequently to discuss the course material.

--Reading assignments are required and must be completed before class begins on the date for which the assignment is listed.

--The midterms and final are in class, essay-type tests. If the student does not receive full credit on the in-class midterms, it is essential to meet with the professor and improve his or her understanding of this kind of test, in preparation for the final exam.

--The writing assignments:

Writing Assignment #1 is to summarize and evaluate in three pages an article from a historical journal to be distributed near the beginning of the term. Each student will have a different article. The purpose of this assignment is to introduce the student to the process of historical analysis based on documentary evidence. Every student will be required to meet with the professor in his office at least once for this assignment.

--Writing Assignment #2 is to analyze in four pages Solomon Northup's Twelve Years A Slave according to guidelines to be distributed.

Submit writing assignments by hard copy in class, not by email attachment.

--The final exam will require a comprehensive essay in response to a question derived from the material of the second half of the course (the origins of the Civil War) but the student should show a grasp of the course's main themes from the beginning: liberty, democracy, and equality. The student should be prepared to write for 105 minutes.

--Classroom decorum: No electronic devices (cell phones, computers, PAD's, recording devices) may be used in the classroom. Please use ink, not pencil, in writing exams. No talking out of turn, eating, or other disruptive activities. In studying for exams the student is strongly discouraged from participating in study groups and is strongly encouraged, instead, to meet with the professor.

--Email communications are not for serious matters or for submitting written work in this course. Visiting or calling the professor's office is better.

Historical Study

Goals: Students recognize how past events are studied and how they influence today's society and the human condition.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

1. Students construct an integrated perspective on history and the factors that shape human activity.
2. Students describe and analyze the origins and nature of contemporary issues.
3. Students speak and write critically about primary and secondary historical sources by examining diverse interpretations of past events and ideas in their historical contexts.

Rationale for fulfilling the GE Learning Outcomes for Historical Study:

Goals of the course that fulfill the GE Learning Outcomes in Historical Study: History courses develop students' knowledge of how past events influence today's society and help them understand how humans view themselves through the following ways:

1. Critically examine theories of history, and historical methodologies
2. Engage with contemporary and historical debates on specific regions, time periods and themes of the human past
3. Through reading in primary and secondary sources and in-depth class discussion, students will access and critically examine social, political, economic, military, gender, religious, ecological, and ethnic/racial/national movements in a wider socio-cultural context
4. Students will carry out in-depth analysis in a final paper comparing distinct historical moments, social movements and their effects

--Plagiarism (using the written words of others as if they are your own) is a serious offense and is not tolerated by instructors in the History Department.

Enhancement of the Honors Version of History 2001

The student is able to claim honors for this course because its content is enriched by theoretical considerations and comparative analyses.

Honors should entail advanced critical thought, which means the student is expected not only to understand that history is a debate about the past, but that theories about historical change over time compete by weighing the same evidence in different ways. While the instructor can assert in a regular 2001 course that history is not an objective reality, in that it exists in as many versions as there are living human beings at any given moment, in an honors version the student acquires an enhanced understanding that a given theory of change is superior only because it is more persuasive for a majority at a given moment, not because it is right.

In this course, specifically, by the time the student reaches 1877, he or she should be able to weigh the peculiar tradeoff that resolved the national election crisis at that moment. The student should understand that if one approaches the facts with a political model, one concludes that "the system worked." If the student prefers a social model, the conclusion might be that representatives of elites concocted a formula by which they maintained their domination of inferior classes. By an ideological model, one can see the outcome as a general commitment by congressmen to preserve democratic-republican idealism at the expense of perfect majoritarian practice. By a cultural model, the student can see the bargain as the result of a mature political culture in which losers now can be winners later if they hunker down and do what is necessary to preserve the culture. All of this is too open-ended for the student of a regular History 2001, who should be expected merely to achieve a command of the basics of the bargain and discuss why it came out the way it did.

As for the comparative work, a student should be able to keep in mind, for example, the regional arrays of distinctions that made the nation such an arduous work in progress. Given the Civil War as an organizing event, this is true in both versions of this course. However, the honors student should be able to detect important differences in, say, racial demography and the character of racial policing in North and South, or the substantially less successful advances in internal navigation in the South than in the North, and the economic consequences.

Honors students are expected to be more proactive in the classroom than those in regular courses. In presenting a primary document, for example, the instructor in the regular class must provide very specific and easily understood prompts for discussion, and provide more if the students do not react quickly, whereas prompts in the Honors classroom can be more open-ended and students should have a greater sense of driving the discussion themselves. For example, in teaching the Bill of Rights of 1689, students in the regular course will need a lot of help isolating those passages that influenced James Madison in writing the American Bill of Rights, whereas the Honors students should be able to get started with the prompt: What language in this document sounds familiar to an American?

Grading standards in the Honors course should be adjusted for higher expectations of analytical depth. If the student in the regular course receives an "A" on a midterm for coming up with a good list of events in chronological order leading up to the American Revolution, the Honors student should do that and provide a recognizable thesis about causation that goes beyond mere competent recitation. That is, the Honors student should be asked not just what the Coercive Acts were but exactly which principle upheld in the Bill of Rights of 1689 each of them violated.

RE: Assessment Plan for proposed GE courses: Historical Study Category, Social Diversity in the U.S., and Diversity: Global Studies

Assessment Goals and Objectives

1. Both the GE and course-specific learning objectives for all History courses might be summarized as follows:

Historical Study GE Requirements:

Goals:

Students recognize how past events are studied and how they influence today's society and the human condition.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

1. Students construct an integrated perspective on history and the factors that shape human activity.
2. Students describe and analyze the origins and nature of contemporary issues.
3. Students speak and write critically about primary and secondary historical sources by examining diverse interpretations of past events and ideas in their historical contexts.

Goals of the courses that fulfill the GE Learning Outcomes:

History courses develop students' recognition of how past events are studied and how they influence today's society and the human condition through the following ways:

1. Critically examine theories of history, and historical methodologies
2. Engage with contemporary and historical debates on specific regions, time periods and themes of the human past.
3. Through reading in primary and secondary sources and in-depth class discussion, students will access and critically examine social, political, economic, military, gender, religious, ecological, and ethnic/racial/national movements in a wider socio- cultural context.
4. Students will carry out in-depth analysis in a final paper, exam, or project comparing distinct historical moments, social movements and their effects

2. Both the GE and course-specific learning objectives for History courses requesting Social Diversity in the U.S. might be summarized as follows:

Social Diversity GE Requirements:

Goals:

Courses in social diversity will foster students' understanding of the pluralistic nature of institutions, society, and culture in the United States in order to become educated, productive, and principled citizens.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

1. Students describe and evaluate the roles of such categories as race, gender and sexuality, disability, class, ethnicity, and religion in the pluralistic institutions and cultures of the United States.
2. Students recognize the role of social diversity in shaping their own attitudes and values regarding appreciation, tolerance, and equality of others.

Goals of the course that fulfill the GE Learning Outcomes: Students will achieve the social diversity goals and learning outcomes by

1. Completing readings, attending lectures, and participating in class discussions and in-class assignments that will help students understand how the categories of race, gender, class, ethnicity, religion, and nation have shaped peoples' identities and the distribution of power and resources in the U.S. and elsewhere
 2. Describe theories of racial, ethnic, class, national, gender, and religious formation on exams and written assignments.
 3. Critically examine theories of race, gender, class, ethnicity, religion, and nation
 4. Engage with contemporary and historical debates on race, gender, class, ethnicity, religion, and nation.
 5. Access and critically examine movements framed by race, gender, class, ethnicity, religion, and/or nation in a wider socio-cultural context.
 6. Carry out in-depth analysis in a final paper, exam, or project comparing distinct moments of ethnic, racial, nationalist, gender, class, and/or religious mobilization or social movements and their effects.
3. Both the GE and course-specific learning objectives for History courses requesting Diversity: Global Studies might be summarized as follows:

Global Studies GE Requirements:

Goals:

Courses in Diversity – Global Studies will foster students' understanding of the pluralistic nature of institutions, society, and culture across the world in order to become educated, productive, and principled citizens.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

1. Students understand some of the political, economic, cultural, physical, social, and philosophical aspects of one or more of the world's nations, peoples and cultures outside the U.S.
2. Students recognize the role of national and international diversity in shaping their own attitudes and values as global citizens.

Goals of the course that fulfill the GE Learning Outcomes: Students will achieve the social diversity goals and learning outcomes by

1. Through reading in primary and secondary sources and in-depth class discussion, students critically examine the political, economic, social, cultural and philosophical development in the World.
2. Engage with contemporary and historical debates on the differences and similarities between cultures and peoples.
3. Access and critically examine ethnically, nationally or religiously framed movements in a wider socio-cultural and global context.
4. Carry out in-depth analysis in a final paper, exam, or project comparing distinct moments in human history and how they shaped the world in the past and today.
5. Completing readings, attending lectures, and participating in class discussions and in-class assignments that will help students understand the complexity of debates over international issues. They will describe theories of international issues on exams and written assignments.
6. Students will understand the roots and structures of today's globalized world.

II. Methods

An assessment of whether these objectives are met is effectively carried out by an examination of the work students are actually required to do for the course. Contributions in class discussions will be considered, but weighted more lightly, given the tendency for more confident students to contribute more to such discussions. Paper and exams will provide an understanding of students' abilities to think historically and to engage in analysis. This can be gauged by their responses to specific exam questions—asking students to provide a perspective on history and relate that perspective to an understanding of the factors that shape human activity. Thus, exams for Historical Study courses will have at least one question that requires students to provide a perspective on the factors that shaped an event or theory. Similarly, for courses that include Diversity in the U.S. GE requirements, we will have at least one question that requires students to provide a description of the roles of categories such as race, gender, class, ethnicity and religion and how those roles have helped shape either their perspective or the country's perspective on diversity. For courses that include Diversity: Global Studies, we will ask one question that requires students to provide an understanding of some combination of political, economic, cultural, physical, social, and philosophical differences in or among the world's nations, peoples and cultures outside the U.S. In this way, we hope to measure the courses (and the students') progress toward the multiple objectives of the GE. In this way we should be able to ascertain whether they are acquiring the desired skills and not simply learning (and regurgitating) specific information.

Summary of Data:

A committee, appointed by the UTC Chair, will be asked to evaluate a sample of questions and papers, and to gauge how well the goals of the course seem reflected in them. Assessment of Historical Study, Social Diversity, and Diversity: Global Issues from the GE goals will be carried out primarily through the evaluation of formal graded assignments and ungraded in-class assignments. The committee will rank the assignments across a four-category scale that captures students' mastery of the GE goals. Students will complete an informal feedback survey halfway through the semester to assess their own performance, the pace of the class, and the instructor's effectiveness. A brief summary report will be written by the UTC Chair, and that, as well as the sampled questions themselves, will be made available to the instructor and to the Chair of the department. We intend to insure that the proposed courses adequately articulate these goals, teach toward them, test for them, and help students realize their individual potential to meet them. Assessments will be summarized and used to alter the course for the next teaching.
