Subject: Revision to the Bachelor of Arts in Music

To Whom This May Concern,

The School of Music is requesting a revision to the Bachelor of Arts in Music program. While the current program is considered to be very flexible, the School's faculty believes that many students also desire and need disciplinary concentrations in addition to the flexibility inherent to the program. Current or prospective music students who are interested in pairing music with a program outside of the School will be very interested in the newly revised program. We expect enrollment in the School to increase modestly as a result of these revisions.

In the new program, the School is creating concentrations in Performance, Musicology, Theory, Composition, and Jazz Studies. The credits used for these concentrations stem from the musicology and music electives present in the current form of the program. In addition, there is a no-concentration option for those students seeking the traditional flexibility of the Bachelor of Arts in Music. Current students in the Bachelor of Arts will have the freedom to choose whether to stay on the existing program or to switch to the new program.

Sincerely,

Timothy Leasure
Associate Director
Chair of Undergraduate Studies
The School of Music
