COURSE DESCRIPTION

This course focuses on the rich variety, aesthetic beauty, and political significance of popular music in modern African cities. By closely attending to the genres, forms, styles, and social life of African popular music, students will encounter the dynamic soundscape of popular culture in Africa today. By calling this culture “popular,” this class takes seriously the youth-driven social and aesthetic trends cultivated in cities within particular contexts of labor, politics, leisure, ritual, and consumer capitalism. The “urbanity” of this culture will take us to a variety of urban contexts—from mining towns to cosmopolitan city centers, from nightclub performances to state-sponsored cultural festivals, and from street-side ceremonies to cyber cafés—in cities across the continent—from Algiers to Johannesburg, and from Dakar to Dar es Salaam. Listening closely to the extraordinary sounds of this popular culture will allow students to better understand and appreciate one of the world’s most prodigious cultural resources: the modern music of urban Africa.

Musical genres this class will consider, include: Ghanaian highlife, North African raï, South African township music, East African taarab, Congolese rumba, Nigerian jùjú, West African praise music, protest songs in Zimbabwe and Egypt, and diasporic fusions in Belgium, Sweden, and New York, among many others. Over the course of the semester, as we listen in to these sounds and study their social contexts, students will discover the cultural commonalities and stylistic differences that make African popular music a coherent and dynamic topic of study.

COURSE EXPECTATIONS AND OBJECTIVES

Taking the cities of the African continent and its modern diasporas as geographical points of reference, we work from the premise that African popular music encompasses a wide variety of complex musical forms and styles. Students will learn to identify musical sounds and structures and differentiate between genres through in-depth audition and discussion of recorded examples. To this end, students will keep a weekly listening journal, developing critical listening skills through regular and thoughtful writing. Outside of class, students will listen to selected programs from the nationally syndicated public radio program, Afropop Worldwide (<http://www.afropop.org/>). The content of these programs will be taken up in class discussions and will appear on in-class examinations. Finally, students will be asked to attend a local live music event featuring African and/or African-derived music and write a 5-7 page report based on their experience. While we will discuss aspects of musical structure and composition, no prior study of music is required for this course.

GENERAL EDUCATION (GE) GOALS AND EXPECTED LEARNING OUTCOMES

1. Cultures and Ideas

Goals: Students evaluate significant cultural phenomena and ideas in order to develop capacities for aesthetic and historical response and judgment; and interpretation and evaluation.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

1. Students analyze and interpret major forms of human thought, culture, and expression.
2. Students evaluate how ideas influence the character of human beliefs, the perception of reality, and the norms which guide human behavior.

→ Using popular music as a means of examining and exploring social life in modern African cities, this course addresses significant cultural phenomena and ideas in modern-day Africa, which students will learn to understand, evaluate, and interpret through regular and thoughtful reading, listening, and discussion.

2. Diversity

Goals: Students understand the pluralistic nature of institutions, society, and culture in the United States and across the world in order to become educated, productive, and principled citizens.

Expected Learning Outcomes: Global Studies

1. Students understand some of the political, economic, cultural, physical, social, and philosophical aspects of one or more of the world's nations, peoples and cultures outside the U.S.
2. Students recognize the role of national and international diversity in shaping their own attitudes and values as global citizens.

→ This course promotes a global conception of urban African social life, using the social practice of popular music to foster a pluralistic understanding of contemporary African institutions, societies, and cultures.

ASSIGNMENTS

There will be five in-class examinations during the semester, four quizzes (two before the midterm, and two after the midterm) and a midterm exam (week seven). Reading assignments should be completed at home before the Wednesday class session of each week. There are two types of writing assignments in this class: a weekly listening journal, and a final concert report. They are described as follows:

1. On Wednesday of each week, students will upload a short listening journal entry (1-2 paragraphs in length, no more) to the appropriate dropbox folder on Carmen. These entries should reflect on the week's listening examples in relation to the assigned readings and class discussion. Students are encouraged to comment on aspects of musical style, form, lyrics, or (in the case of music videos), visual content. Aesthetic judgments are fine (good or bad) but should be informed by particular features of the musical example in question. Your journal entries will be used to evaluate your skills of discernment, analysis, and interpretation of the thought, culture, and expression of a diversity of African popular music forms encountered throughout the semester.
2. For the final concert report, students will attend a concert in the Columbus area and write an essay (5-7 pages, or 1200-1700 words) based on your observations and experiences at the event. Your essay should cover four principle topics. First, you should identify the music you're writing about in terms of genre. What kind of music is this? What is its history? Does the performance feature several genres? If so, what is their relation to each other? Second, your essay should describe the social space of the event. What kind of venue are you attending? Is it a club? A church? A concert hall? Who are the performers? Are they professionals or amateurs? Who is in the audience? Is this a "formal" concert event, with audience members sitting passively as they listen, or does the performance encourage audience participation, such as dance? (You might talk to some fellow audience members after the performance and ask them about their experiences and compare them with your own.) Third, your essay should address the music of the performance, in terms of sound, lyrical expression (if song is part of the music you observe), and gesture (dance). You should also consider the particular criteria of musical style, form, and value pertinent to the genre(s) you observe. And fourth, with the expected learning outcomes of the pertinent GE categories in mind ("Culture and Ideas" and "Diversity"), your essay should reflect on a) how this musical performance enhances your understanding of international diversity and its various aspects (political, economic, cultural, physical, social, and/or philosophical); and b) how the performance relates to broader systems of belief, perception, and norms addressed in this class. A good essay is one that incorporates these four topics in a composition that is cogent and concise.

EVALUATION

The final grade will be figured in the following manner:

Class preparation, attendance, and participation	10%
Weekly listening journal (uploaded to Carmen)	20%
4 Quizzes (listening identification, multiple choice, short answer)	20%
Midterm Exam (listening, multiple choice, short answer)	20%
Final Concert Report (Due week fourteen, uploaded to Carmen)	30%

GRADING SCALE

A = Excellent; B = Good; C = Fair; D = Poor; E = Failing. Minuses and Pluses will reflect incremental adjustments (e.g. B+ = Very Good)

ATTENDANCE POLICY

Class attendance is obligatory. Further, getting to class in a timely manner is a good virtue. All absences or late-arrivals must be cleared with the instructor in advance or, in the case of a medical emergency, be accounted for in writing after the fact. Unexcused absences and late-arrivals demonstrate a lack of respect to your professor and peers and will significantly lower your grade.

READINGS, LISTENING, AND VIEWING ASSIGNMENTS

Most readings for this class are accessible via online databases through the OSU library system. Links to the relevant databases will be provided on the "Library" page on the Carmen course site. Additionally, links to digital copies of book chapters, encyclopedia entries, and articles available through the OSU library databases will be posted to the "Content" section of the Carmen course page. As available, hard copies of book chapters and articles will be made available through the Thompson library reserves. All listening examples are available online, via sites such as Soundcloud and YouTube. Links to listening examples will be posted to the Content section of the Carmen course page. Documentary films will be screened in class and placed on reserve at Thompson library.

ACADEMIC MISCONDUCT

It is the responsibility of the Committee on Academic Misconduct to investigate or establish procedures for the investigation of all reported cases of student academic misconduct. The term "academic misconduct" includes all forms of student academic misconduct wherever committed; illustrated by, but not limited to, cases of plagiarism and dishonest practices in connection with examinations. Instructors shall report all instances of alleged academic misconduct to the committee (Faculty Rule 3335-5-487). For additional information, see the Code of Student Conduct a) How do the course objectives address the GE category expected learning outcomes?

Taking the cities of the African continent and its modern diasporas as geographical points of reference, this course works from the premise that African popular music encompasses a wide variety of complex and compelling musical forms and styles. Over the course of the semester, students will learn to identify musical sounds and structures and differentiate between genres through in-depth audition and discussion of recorded examples.

Using popular music as a means of examining and exploring social life in modern African cities, this course fosters a pluralistic understanding of contemporary African societies and cultures, promoting a global conception of urban African social life. Taking seriously the youth-driven social and aesthetic trends cultivated in cities within particular contexts of labor, politics, leisure, ritual, and consumer capitalism, this course also addresses significant cultural phenomena and ideas in modern-day Africa, which students will learn to understand, evaluate, and interpret through regular and thoughtful reading, listening, and discussion.

b) How do the readings assigned address the GE category expected learning outcomes?

The course readings provide significant context for the assigned audio and audio-visual media. Specifically, reading assignments address the emergence, development, and practice of African popular music within the particular social, cultural, economic, and political contexts of regional African cities. The readings will help students identify aspects of genre, form, and style and situate these musical elements within broader social and cultural frameworks. Students will begin to understand, evaluate, and interpret these music cultures by synthesizing their aural encounters with the scholarly perspectives presented in the readings in weekly listening journal entries, as well as in-class lectures and discussions.

c) How do the topics address the GE category expected learning outcomes?

Each week the course will address new genres of music from different African regions, including West, Central, East, Southern, and Northern Africa, as well as diasporic communities in Europe and America. Through in-depth audition of and reflective writing about a wide variety of African popular musics, across the continent and throughout the diaspora, this course will allow students to better understand the diversity and complexity of African urban life. Course topics will also ask students to consider the idea of Africa in a global context and reflect critically on their relationship to Africa, Africans, and the music of this diverse people and place.

d) How do the written assignments address the GE category expected learning outcomes?

Each week, students will complete a short listening journal entry, reflecting on selected audio and audio-visual examples in relation to the assigned readings and class discussion. Students will be asked to comment on aspects of musical style, form, lyrics, and (in the case of music videos) visual content. The listening journal will ensure that students remain consistently and thoughtfully engaged with the assigned music examples throughout the semester. The goal of the journal is to encourage students formulate, in their own words, informed interpretations and opinions about the sounds they hear and the social worlds of which they are a part. Students will also complete a longer, take-home essay assignment for this course. For this essay, students will experience African music first-hand by attending a local live music event featuring African and/or African-derived music (of which Columbus features rich and regular offerings). The assignment is to write an essay based on their observations and experiences at the event. In clear and cogent writing, students will be asked to describe aspects of the musical form and style, genre, and provide an account the social setting in which the live performance takes place. This paper will gauge the students' ability to apply their acquired knowledge of African popular musics, through thick description and analysis of a musical event of their choice.

e) How does the course aim to sharpen students' response, judgment, and evaluation skills?

This course will ask students to exercise their abilities to describe, analyze, and evaluate musical forms, styles, and genres. It will also ask them to appreciate and interpret the social, economic, political, and cultural contexts of these musics. In so doing, the students will not only learn to understand structural aspects of these humanly organized sounds, but also to learn the ways in which these sounds are intimately and complexly linked to particular African places, historical periods, social practices, and cultural ideas. In learning to approach critically the particular social and musical forms addressed in this course, students will begin to develop a personal framework for encountering and evaluating both familiar and unfamiliar cultural expressions in the world.

A GE assessment plan which explains how the faculty will assess the effectiveness of the course in achieving the GE expected learning outcomes over time, rather than how individual student grades will be assessed. Successful assessment plans include the following:

a) Description of the specific methods the faculty will use to demonstrate that the aggregate of his/her students are achieving the goals and expected learning outcomes of this GE category. Thus, if the faculty plans to use direct measures such as embedded questions on exams, pre- and post-tests, or a particular essay assignment, provide some examples. If the faculty plans on using indirect measures such as opinion surveys or student self-evaluations, give concrete examples as well. (Ideally, a plan should include both direct and indirect measures.)

Assessment of achievement of the goals and learning outcomes of the “Cultures and Ideas” and “Diversity” GEs in this course will include 1) review of the students listening journal entries; 2) embedded questions in the quizzes and midterm exam; 3) a specific rubric on the final essay assignment; and 4) separate questions on the final course evaluation for each of the GE categories.

- 1) The journal entries will demonstrate cumulative skills of discernment, analysis, and interpretation of the thought, culture, and expression of a diversity of African popular music forms at weekly intervals.
- 2) Embedded questions in quizzes and exams will highlight particular issues of social and cultural knowledge, emphasizing the influence of African popular music on the character of human beliefs, perceptions of reality, and the norms which guide human behavior (including politics, religion, intellectual property, the global economy, and local aesthetics).
- 3) The final essay will indicate the students’ ability to understand, evaluate, and interpret a live musical performance using the analytic, descriptive, and interpretive tools acquired over the course of the semester. Through a separate rubric included in the essay assignment, students will be asked to reflect on a) how this musical performance enhances their understanding of international diversity and its various aspects (political, economic, cultural, physical, social, and/or philosophical); and b) how the performance relates to broader systems of belief, perception, and norms addressed in class.
- 4) Finally, a discursive course evaluation will be handed out at the end of the semester which will include two questions pertaining to each of the GE categories: “Cultures and Ideas” and “Diversity.” Students will be asked to respond of their perceived achievement of the expected learning outcomes for each of these categories.

b) Explanation of the level of student achievement expected: What will the faculty define as “success” in terms of student achievement of learning outcomes? For example, for an embedded question, he/she might define “success” as a certain percentage of students answering the question correctly. For an essay, he/she might define success as a particular average overall score based on a scoring rubric.

Successful achievement for the goals and learning outcomes identified will be determined by the regular submission of journal entries (with an expectation of 100% participation); correct responses to embedded questions on quizzes and exams (with minimum of 75% correct response rate across the class); a final essay that addresses the topics outlined in the expected learning outcomes rubric (with at least 85% of the class receiving a C or better); and broad participation in the discursive course evaluation at the end of the semester (with a goal of 90% or better participation across the class).

c) Description of follow-up/feedback process: Once the faculty collects the data on student achievement, how will he/she use this information to make course improvements? How will the information be archived?

After the data is collected from assessments of journal entries, quiz and midterm questions, the final essay, and the class evaluation, the faculty instructor will record the results and make them available to any future instructors of the course. The instructor will also assess the success of the course as instructed and make note of any necessary adjustments to the course. Course information will be archived in a designated folder on the instructor's office computer.
