I heartily concur with Jeff's conclusion. Anthropology grants concurrence on Sociology 4463.

Congratulations on working quickly to resolve these issues so that both courses can be offered. This enriches both departments.

Cheers,
Kris

Kara, this is super, I want to enroll!! Thanks so much for working with us. The list of other courses is great (and the resources you list are super), just one note on the list of courses, our's is number 5624, the 5 fell out.

Kris, we can strongly support concurrence for Kara's class.

Best to all, very glad to be in touch

Jeff

Subject: Revised Food and Inequality in the United States Syllabus

Greetings Kristen and Jeff,

As you know, Jeff and I had a chance to talk about our food courses yesterday. Per our conversation, I have revised my syllabus in three ways with the hopes that these changes sufficiently differentiate our courses. Here is what I did:

1. I have specified in each of the course objectives that this class looks only at the United States. I have also added a line to this end in the course description (page 1 of the syllabus)
2. I have removed two reading assignments that look at food and inequality globally or in other countries. They include:
 - a. Michael Carolon, "Food Security and Food Sovereignty." The Sociology of Food and Agriculture.
 - b. Gill Valentine, "A Corporal Geography of Consumption." Environment and Planning D, Society and Space.
3. I have added Anthropology 5624 to the list of additional courses students can take to further their learning about food at OSU (page 12 of the syllabus)

I also wanted to point out that I am submitted this course specifically for the Diversity in the United States GE category, not the global diversity GE category.

I hope that these revisions sufficiently differentiate my course from Jeff's, but please let me know if you would like to see any additional revisions before signing off on concurrence.

Thank you,
Kara
