Course Change Information

What change is being proposed? (If more than one, what changes are being proposed?)

The course title and description are being updated to reflect a broader focus. We are also adjusting the GEs for which the course will meet to better match the course content.

What is the rationale for the proposed change(s)?

We believe the course will be more appealing to students because the title and description better encompasses the content of the course and broadening the GE categories the course completes broadens the pool of potential students.

What are the programmatic implications of the proposed change(s)?

(e.g. program requirements to be added or removed, changes to be made in available resources, effect on other programs that use the course)?

This course has previously met requirement for the Islamic Studies Major and will continue to do so in the revised major. It will also meet elective requirements in the newly proposed Islamic Studies minor.

Is approval of the request contingent upon the approval of other course or curricular program request? No

Is this a request to withdraw the course? No

Professor S. Webber

During the American Revolution, so many American ships called at the port of Tangiers that the Continental Congress sought recognition from the “Emperor” of Morocco to establish good relations between the two countries. This recognition was granted December 20, 1777, making Morocco the first country to recognize the United States of America. (Embassy of the Kingdom of Morocco, Washington D.C. Accessed on line 1/9/2017)

On December 20, 1777, the Kingdom of Morocco became the first country in the world to recognize United States independence, only a year and a half after the U.S. Declaration of Independence was issued. The War of Independence was still in progress, and the result was still far from certain. ...Under Sultan Mohammed III, Morocco became at once the first Arab state, the first African state, and the first Muslim state to sign a treaty with the United States. Congress ratified the Treaty of Peace and Friendship between the two nations in 1787. Renegotiated in 1836, the treaty is still in force, constituting the longest unbroken treaty relationship in U.S. history. (People's World Quote accessed on line 1/9/2017)

Course Overview

In examining the multiple racial, cultural, and national groups that make up the most diverse religious group in America, we will question what it means to be Muslim in America--focusing on Islam as an American religious phenomenon broadly defined to include secular Muslims.

We will look at the transatlantic slave trade and the European colonial presence as contexts in which Islam was first introduced to America.

We will look at the history of early (mostly African and Arab) Muslims and at the Nation of Islam along with study of the immigrant experience of Muslims in the last two centuries of the Common Era.

When we discuss the 20th century and the present reality of American Muslims today, we will focus on Muslim contributions to America and American culture – especially poetry, politics, sports, pop culture, films, and music.

The course likewise seeks to include fieldtrips to local mosques and Muslim guest speakers.

Finally, no course on Islam in America would be complete without a critical examination of the impacts of 9/11 on Muslims, the erosion of civil rights, and the on-going “war on terrorism.”

This course serves as GE Arts and Humanities Cultures and Ideas Course. In GEC classes of this category, students evaluate significant writing and works of art, including oral literature and verbal arts. Such studies develop capacities for aesthetic and historical response and judgment; interpretation and evaluation; critical listening, reading, seeing, thinking and writing; and experiencing the arts and reflecting on that experience.

Expected Learning Outcomes include:

- 1. Students develop abilities to be informed observers or, or active participants in, the visual, spatial, performing, spoken, or literary arts;
- 2. Students develop an understanding of the foundations of human beliefs, the nature of reality, and the norms that guide human behavior; and
- 3. Students examine and interpret how the human condition and human values are explored through works of art and expressive culture.

Plagiarism. Plagiarism is the representation of another's works or ideas as one's own: it encompasses both word-for-word copying and unacknowledged paraphrase. In accordance with university rules, all cases of suspected plagiarism will be reported to the Committee on Academic Misconduct. Be careful to credit your sources appropriately, especially when doing research on the Internet

Class Cancellation. In the unlikely event of class cancellation due to emergency, I will contact you via email.

What your grade means. Criteria for individual assignments will be explained with each prompt, but here is the overall takeaway:

- E. You or your assignments failed to materialize at the necessary minimum; work was not done, or not pertinent.
- D. You've done just enough to slide through: done some reading, turned in all assignments with minimal attention to their requirements, and been present in body and occasionally in mind.
- C. You've done the reading and turned in all required work on time and in the spirit of the assignment. You've been present in both body and mind as a useful participant in the class. Your course assignments were of limited value, perhaps because of major problems with mechanics, organization, or logic in your writing, or perhaps because you have not thought very deeply about the material.
- B. You've done everything required for a C, but have responded more fully to the demands of the course, both in class and in your writing. Your written work demonstrates your engagement with both the readings and class discussion. You've made progress in reading challenging material, drawing connections between concepts and examples, and shaping your thinking through writing.
- A. You've done everything required for a B. In addition, you've read and observed actively, thought creatively, and written with style. I've learned something from you. (It does quite often happen.)

UNIVERSITY RESOURCES FOR STUDENTS

The OSU Writing Center is available to provide free, professional writing tutoring and

Course Description:

What does it mean to live as modern Muslims in western societies? How do they cope with prejudice, Islamophobia, traditions, integration, war, migration, and new opportunities? We explore the experiences of religious minorities in the U.S. and Europe for Muslims whose families originate from the Arab world, Iran, South Asia, Turkey, Southeast Asia, and Central Asia.

This course is a multi-disciplinary introduction to Muslim diasporic communities in western countries. It considers historical and structural forces driving migration and settlement, on one hand; and personal negotiations of cultures, identities, and experiences, on the other. Main course themes include the historical, economic, and political conditions for overseas mobility and migration; understanding culture, values, and cultural differences; understanding Islamic belief and practice; tensions between traditions and modern life; considering whether America is (or should be) a melting pot or multicultural society; the importance of (extended) family and generations; ideas about authority and freedom; the meanings of citizenship and national belonging; migration and refugees as a global problem; explaining Islamic radicalism.

Course materials consist of auto-biographies, news articles, films, novel excerpts, graphic novels, web resources, and analytical pieces. Students also work for much of the semester on a small group project of their choosing relevant to course themes. Projects could focus on particular immigrant communities, an ethnic festival or event (pictured below), historical migration trends, a collection of novels and films, immigration laws and politics, interviews with community members or an organization, or a visit to and report about an institution like the Arab American Museum in Dearborn, Michigan (pictured above). The group projects conclude with student presentations near the end of the semester, whose topics I will re-integrate into the main course themes. Class formats include lectures, discussions, debates, film (and possibly event) viewing, and student presentations.

General Education Fulfillment:

This course is intended to satisfy the GE requirements for Social Science: Individuals and Groups; and for Diversity: Social Diversity in the United States. This course also meets requirements for the major in Islamic Studies, the Department of NELC.

GE Social Science

Goals: Students understand the systematic study of human behavior and cognition; the structure of human societies, cultures, and institutions; and the processes by which individuals, groups, and societies interact, communicate, and use human, natural, and economic resources.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

- Individuals and Groups
 1. Students understand the theories and methods of social scientific inquiry as they apply to the study of individuals and groups.
 2. Students understand the behavior of individuals, differences and similarities in social and cultural contexts of human existence, and the processes by which groups function.
 3. Students comprehend and assess individual and group values and their importance in social problem solving and policy making.

GE Diversity

Goals: Students understand the pluralistic nature of institutions, society, and culture in the United States and across the world in order to become educated, productive, and principled citizens.

Expected Learning Outcomes:

- Social Diversity in the United States
 1. Students describe and evaluate the roles of such categories as race, gender and sexuality, disability, class, ethnicity, and religion in the pluralistic institutions and cultures of the United States.
 2. Students recognize the role of social diversity in shaping their own attitudes and values regarding appreciation, tolerance, and equality of others.

Grading scale:

A (94-100) A- (90-93) B+ (87-89) B (83-86) B- (80-82) C+ (77-79) C (73-76) C- (70-72) D+ (67-69) D (60-66) E (below 60)

Attendance and Participation

Your presence and full engagement are key to doing well in the course. Please keep absences to a minimum. When you are in class, please be fully present. For each week of classes that you do so, you will earn a point. For every absence after 2 (excused or unexcused), you will lose a point. Three tardies (arriving late or leaving early) is equal to one absence. Please talk with me about extenuating circumstances. The policy is not meant to be punitive; it is meant to encourage you to get the most out of the class.

Weekly Assignments (10)

Every week, the instructor will assign one of the following kinds of assignments: a reading response, a quiz, a class debate or other in-class group activity, a written reflection on the material or discussion, a brief analysis of a current new story. Each of these assignments is worth 2 points. Details regarding the requirements of the assignment will be distributed in advance.

Online Discussion Posts (5)

Five times this semester, you are asked to post a question or comment about the course material to the online discussion board in Carmen. For every post, you can earn up to 1 point; for every substantial response you make on another student's post, you can earn up to 1 more point (2 points total).

Midterm Proposal and Bibliography

Every student will choose a topic of interest to research and write about. The midterm proposal will summarize the topic, what you hope to learn about it, and the sources you will use. More detailed information about this assignment will be distributed and discussed in class. NOTE: If you feel that you would get more out of this assignment by creating an artistic or other kind of project instead of a written paper, please discuss your idea with me and we will work it out.

Class Presentation

At the end of the semester, students will present their final research project (topic, sources, and findings) to the class. The presentation should last around 15 minutes (with time for a Question and Answer session) and include some audio/visual materials.

Final Research Project

The final research project is a 12-15 page research paper, including the bibliography. More detailed information about this assignment will be distributed and discussed in class. NOTE: If you feel that you would get more out of this assignment by creating an artistic or other kind of project instead of a written paper, please discuss your idea with me and we will work it out.

Other Policies and Information:

I do not generally round up final grades more than half a percentage point. You are welcome to increase your grade by taking advantage of several Extra Credit opportunities that will be presented throughout the semester.

Incompletes: I prefer to avoid incompletes when possible, but sometimes you need one. You are required to request it before final exam week, be passing the course, and give good reasons.

Plagiarism is the representation of another's works or ideas as one's own. It includes the unacknowledged word for word use and/or paraphrasing of another person's work and/or the inappropriate unacknowledged use of another person's ideas. Please ask me if you have any questions about this. All suspected cases are reported to the Committee on Academic Misconduct, in accordance with university rules. Substantiated cases would mean a failing grade in the course and possibly expulsion, according to university rules. I use anti-plagiarism software to check for undocumented source material. Collaboration and sharing ideas from others, however, is a good thing. We learn by building on each other's ideas. Just make sure you acknowledge your sources. Also, do something with the ideas of others: evaluate them, relate them to other ideas, argue for or against them, give your own examples illustrating them.

ACADEMIC MISCONDUCT: It is the responsibility of the Committee on Academic Misconduct to investigate or establish procedures for the investigation of all reported cases of student academic misconduct. The term "academic misconduct" includes all forms of student academic misconduct wherever committed; illustrated by, but not limited to, cases of plagiarism and dishonest practices in connection with examinations. Instructors shall report all instances of alleged academic misconduct to the committee (Faculty Rule 3335-5-487). For additional information, see the Code of Student Conduct (<http://studentlife.osu.edu/csc/>).

The Ohio State University affirms the importance and value of diversity in the student body. Our programs and curricula reflect our multicultural society and global economy and seek to provide opportunities for students to learn more about persons who are different from them. We are committed to maintaining a community that recognizes and values the inherent worth and dignity of every person; fosters sensitivity, understanding, and mutual respect among each member of our community; and encourages each individual to strive to reach his or her own potential. Discrimination against any individual based upon protected status, which is defined as age, color, disability, gender identity or expression, national origin, race, religion, sex, sexual orientation, or veteran status, is prohibited.

CAVEATS AND DISCLAIMERS

I have intentionally chosen readings & films that offer a range of different interpretations and viewpoints, some of which argue against each other. The points of view expressed in the course material do not necessarily reflect my views or those of the University. This course is not trying to advocate any particular political or religious point of view, or to evaluate the rightness of official policy. Rather, we are trying to understand Muslims in western societies, whom we will listen to but not necessarily agree with. Our common task is to evaluate everything thoughtfully, because an opinion you disagree with is instructive to all of us. You are NOT required to agree with what you read or hear (including from me), but I DO ask that you give every idea careful consideration and respect for those expressing them. You are welcome to argue for your own point of view in a constructive manner. You will be graded not for which side you take, but how well you argue for it (using well-documented facts, materials from our course, methodical argument, etc.). This applies to what you say in class and what you write in your assignments.

Disability policy:

The University strives to make all learning experiences as accessible as possible. If you anticipate or experience academic barriers based on your disability (including mental health, chronic or temporary medical conditions), please let me know immediately so that we can privately discuss options. You are also welcome to register with Student Life Disability Services to establish reasonable accommodations. After registration, make arrangements with me as soon as possible to discuss your accommodations so that they may be implemented in a timely fashion. SLDS contact information: slds@osu.edu; 614-292-3307; slds.osu.edu; 098 Baker Hall, 113 W. 12th Avenue.

GE Rationale – Social Diversity in the United States

Near Eastern Languages & Cultures (NELC) 3201

Muslims in America and Europe: Migration and Living Between Worlds

COURSE DESCRIPTION

This course is a multi-disciplinary introduction to Muslim diasporic communities in western countries. It considers historical and structural forces driving migration and settlement, on one hand; and personal negotiations of cultures, identities, and experiences, on the other. Main course themes include the historical, economic, and political conditions for overseas mobility and migration; understanding culture, values, and cultural differences; understanding Islamic belief and practice; tensions between traditions and modern life; considering whether America is (or should be) a melting pot or multicultural society; the importance of (extended) family and generations; ideas about authority and freedom; the meanings of citizenship and national belonging; migration and refugees as a global problem; explaining Islamic radicalism.

Diversity: Social Diversity in the United States

Expected Learning Outcomes:

- 1) Students describe and evaluate the roles of such categories as race, gender and sexuality, disability, class, ethnicity, and religion in the pluralistic institutions and cultures of the United States.
 - a) The course is centrally concerned about characterizing and making sense of the meanings of ethnicity and religion for American Muslims. But it is also integrally concerned about gender, sexuality, class, race, and disability, especially as those intersect with ethnic-religious identity.
 - b) One topic we discuss is, in what “races” should Arabs, Turks, Iranians, Indonesians, and South Asians be properly categorized? How is the very notion of race in America problematic, especially as applied to various Muslim communities?
- 2) Students recognize the role of social diversity in shaping their own attitudes and values regarding appreciation, tolerance, and equality of others.
 - a) A key aim of this course is to build an appreciation for Muslims as an integral part of American diversity. This is an aspect of U.S. demography that is not as much discussed as others are, but has gained much prominence, though not always based on fact, at least since 9/11. One goal of this course is to assess the place of Muslims in America in an evidence-based manner.

- b) A recurring theme of this course is the role of ethnic and religious tradition in the United States of America. We discuss, can old traditions and a religion that makes absolute truth-claims have a productive place in a modern, pluralistic, and democratic society such as the U.S.? What does that proper place look like?
- c) Tolerance, mutual respect, and equality based on actual knowledge and cultural understanding form a key topic of this course. We discuss, are Islamic values consistent with democracy and social tolerance? Can an historically Protestant-majority society like America be tolerant of Muslims, especially given 9/11, global terrorism, and other world events such as mass refugees from Muslim-majority nations?
- d) We also ponder: why should social diversity in America more than something to be tolerated, but also valued as a source of multiple viewpoints, creativity, and positive innovation in a modern society like the U.S.?

Social Sciences

Expected Learning Outcomes:

1. Students understand the theories and methods of social scientific inquiry as they apply to the study of individuals and groups.
 - a) The course's readings and lectures draw from studies in cultural anthropology, sociology, and American studies concerning the social dynamics of immigrant communities in western industrialized nation-states, such as the U.S. and western Europe.
 - b) Conceptual frameworks that will be taught will include theories of ethnicity, ethnic boundary marking and guarding, essentialist and non-essentialist understandings of identity, and performative theories of ethnicity and religion. These will be covered initially in Part I (Quick Start on the Course's Central Issues), and then throughout the course, in the context of the case studies.
 - c) Some students will undertake ethnographic field projects for their term projects. They will be taught and mentored on basic participant observation, interview, and analysis methods.
2. Students understand the behavior of individuals, differences and similarities in social and cultural contexts of human existence, and the processes by which groups function.
 - a) Students are taught to integrate quantitative and qualitative data on migration and migrant communities to arrive at more comprehensive explanations of why migration, and how settlement and integration occur. The course considers historical, political, economic, and social forces driving population movements, on one hand; and personal negotiations of cultures, identities, and experiences, on the other.

- b) The immigrant community cases considered are analyzed in terms of structural constraints of legal and social norms (of both host and sending countries) and the capacities for agency and decision-making of persons and families. The goal is to characterize the cases being studied as a conjuncture of both communal patterning and the possibility of individual choice.
- c) The dilemmas about integration or keeping cultural-religious distinction will be explored through ethnography, journalism, novel, and film.

3. Students comprehend and assess individual and group values and their importance in social problem solving and policy making.

- a) Class lectures and discussions consider issues of ethnic and religious identity, and debates about the proper place of religion and traditions in a modern democratic society. These issues will be approached by a range of social science and humanistic perspectives, such as those listed in ELO 1b.
- b) The beliefs and practices of the Islamic religion will be considered with respect to dominant western societal values of individualism and freedoms. In particular, the social and economic roles of women and men will be considered.
- c) The cases in the course will keep these discussions practical, connecting to current events that provoke public debate about the rights and place of Muslims and immigrants in America, which gives students leverage to think about, for example, U.S. immigration policy and policies concerning discrimination in U.S. institutions.

Appendix: Assessment Rubric for (NELC) 3201: Muslims in America and Europe

Two examples of direct measures:

1. Students have to write a research paper for the term, and questions will be embedded at each stage of the writing process over the semester. The outline, draft, and final version of the research paper will be assessed their improvement with respect to ELO 1 and ELO 2. Student answers will be evaluated on a scale of Excellent-Good-Satisfactory-Poor.

Example questions include:

- a. ELO 1 example questions: In your project, how do you approach ethnicity, religion, and identity of the people that you are investigating and writing about? What roles do ethnic and religious identity play in the lives of the people you are investigating and writing about?
- b. ELO 2 example questions: What particular insights does your project give about the proper place of ethnic traditions and religion in a modern democratic society? In what ways, if any, is a society made more dynamic, productive, creative, or just with the presence of such diverse communities?

Indirect measure:

Opinion Survey

At the beginning and the end of the course, students will be asked to fill in an opinion survey. The survey will include self-assessment questions that evaluate their perceived abilities and skills related to the GE learning outcomes at the beginning of the semester and again at the end. The survey will also include several questions that will give students a chance to demonstrate mastery of the GE learning outcomes.

 - Explanation: These questions prompt students to take the specific cases there are focused on, and link them to the conceptual frameworks taught in the course. Answers would help assess if students indeed understand the theories and methods of social scientific inquiry as they apply to the case studies that they are engaged in for their projects.
- b. ELO 2 example question: In your project, what historical, social, political, economic factors are at play? How are individuals negotiating or living with those factors?
 - Explanation: These questions assess how students place individual decisions of their subjects within the contexts of structural social, political, economic constraints that their subjects live under. This will show whether students understand the behavior of individuals in social and cultural contexts of human existence.
- c. ELO 3 example questions: What particular insights does your project give about the proper place of ethnic traditions and religion in a modern democratic society? In what ways, if any, is a society made more dynamic, productive, creative, or just with the presence of such diverse communities?
 - Explanation: These questions ask for students’ understanding and assessment of Muslim Americans’ individual and group values as seen through ethnic traditions and religious practice and their importance in illuminating the problems of Muslim immigration for an inclusive, pluralistic American society.
