Course Details

Course goals or learning objectives/outcomes

- Students should be able to recognize Black women's myriad contributions to U.S. culture and politics
- Students should be able to understand key theoretical frameworks developed by Black women for better thinking through U.S. social life.
- Students should be able to think critically about the social construction of identity categories, including race, class, gender, and sexuality.
- Students should be able to articulate how such identity categories affect differential social and political experiences across demographics in the U.S. context.
- Students should be able to describe the long history of Black women in this country, particularly with respect to ongoing struggles for freedom as they define it.
- Students should be able to interrogate the role of both state and structural/systemic power in maintaining white supremacy in the U.S.
- Students should be able to appreciate the contemporary diversity of Black feminist political thought, and its solidarities with struggles by other marginalized groups.
