Course Change Information

What change is being proposed? (If more than one, what changes are being proposed?)

Adding the Sustainability new GE to the course

What is the rationale for the proposed change(s)?

Human history, then, can be told as a history of how food has been produced, distributed and consumed. This course offers a synoptic, global history of food, beginning with pre-agricultural societies and ending with today's global food crisis. The course particularly focuses on food systems and their ecological and biological effects. A considerable amount of time in class will be devoted to the question of the sustainability of such systems, from a historical as well as a contemporary perspective. For example, in the lecture on wheat, students are introduced to the late nineteenth-century "wheat crisis" where commentators expressed grave concerns about the impending collapse of the world wheat system (something alleviated by the invention of synthetic fertilizer)

What are the programmatic implications of the proposed change(s)?

(e.g. program requirements to be added or removed, changes to be made in available resources, effect on other programs that use the course)?
