

Comparative Studies Major Revision Proposal

March 17, 2023

Part 1: Rationale

This is a revision to the major in Comparative Studies. Proposed implementation date for these revisions: August 5, 2023.

The existing major in Comparative Studies includes five concentrations (Comparative Cultural Studies; Comparative Ethnic and American Studies; Comparative Literature; Folklore; Science and Technology Studies). The reduction in TT faculty over the past decade has created a situation where we no longer have the faculty expertise required to staff the courses that students need to complete these concentrations.

For example, the concentration in Comparative Ethnic and American Studies requires students to choose five of the following courses (no more than two at the 2XXX level) to complete the Core:

- CS 2105 Literature and Ethnicity
- CS 2214 Introduction to Sexuality Studies
- CS 2264 Introduction to Popular Culture Studies
- CS 2281 American Icons
- CS 2321 Introduction to Asian American Studies
- CS 2322 Introduction to Latino Studies
- CS 2323 Introduction to American Indian Studies
- CS 3686 Cultural Studies of American Musics
- CS 3689 Transnationalism and Culture in the Americas
- CS 4658 Folklore of the Americas
- CS 4685 Comparative Ethnic and American Studies
- CS 4692 Comparative Social Movements
- CS 4803 Studies in Asian American Literature and Culture
- CS 4804 Studies in Latino Literature and Culture
- CS 4805 Literatures of the Americas
- CS 4822 Native American Identity
- CS 4921 Intersections: Approaches to Race, Gender, Class, and Sexuality

During the most recent academic year (21-22), the department was able to offer six of these courses (2105, 2264, 2281, 2322, 3686, 4921). As you see, only two of those are above the 2XXX level.

The concentration in Science and Technology Studies requires students to complete five of the following courses (no more than one at the 2XXX) to complete its core:

- CS 2104 Literature, Science, and Technology
- CS 2214 Intro to Sexuality Studies
- RS 2670 Science and Religion
- CS 2677 Religion and Environmentalism
- CS 3645 Cultures of Medicine
- CS 3646 Natures, Cultures, Technologies
- CS 4597.01 Global Studies of Science and Technology

CS 4661 (3661) The City and Culture
CS 4808 Utopia and Anti-Utopia (3808 Utopia and Dystopia)
CS 4845 Gender, Sexuality, and Science
CS 4846 Social Studies of Objects and Networks
CS 5691 Topics in Comparative Studies (repeatable with appropriate topics)

During the most recent academic year (21-22), the department was able to offer two of these courses (2104, 3645). As you see, only one of those is above the 2XXX level. (One course in Philosophy and four in History can count for the core. The offerings of those courses are beyond the control of Comparative Studies.)

These are typical, not extreme, examples. The department can no longer service the concentrations on a consistent basis. Removal of these prescribed tracks is necessary to alleviate student frustration and create greater transparency about the actually available curriculum. This proposed revision will allow for students' foci in the major to be tailored on a personal basis, in consultation with their advisors, but we will no longer maintain five prescribed concentrations. The data that drives this revision is the consistency of comments from students as they struggle to navigate the existing concentrations. Our academic advisor, Emily Carpenter, reports that nearly every student who attempted to graduate in SP 2022 required exceptions in order to do so. Last year was not an anomaly. Students have faced this paucity of course offerings for several years.

Comparative Studies currently offers a major in Religious Studies and in World Literature. Neither of them will be affected by the proposed revision of the Comparative Studies major. The department also offers minors in Comparative Studies, American Studies, Folklore, Religious Studies, Science and Technology Studies, and World Literatures. None of these minors will be affected by the proposed revision of the Comparative Studies major.

Part 2: Curricular Requirements for the Revised CS Major

The transition plan for this proposal is straightforward: 1) These revisions reflect the existing reality of staffing and course offerings for the Comparative Studies department, so no changes are required there. We are merely updating the major to reflect the reality of the current department. 2) For students who are currently majors, we will allow for continuing under the old, pre-revision requirements, if desired, until such students have graduated (spring 2026, ideally, though some students may take longer). Current majors will also have the ability to opt for the revised structure instead, of course. The revised advising sheet is attached below.

Courses Required for Proposed Comparative Studies Undergraduate Major—All Currently Offered

Course #	Course Title	Credit Hours	Description	PreReq
CS 2099	The Question of Comparative Studies	1 CH	This course offers an introduction to the Comparative Studies major. It is designed to help students to take advantage of curricular, research, and advising opportunities; to manage the particular challenges of independent and interdisciplinary work; to link classroom work to social and political engagement with relevant communities; and to prepare for life after graduation. This course is graded S/U	None
CS 2360	Introduction to Comparative Cultural Studies	3 CH	Introduction to interdisciplinary field of cultural studies; emphasis on relation of cultural production to power, knowledge, and authority, globally and locally.	None
CS 3990*	Approaches to Comparative Studies	3 CH	Introduces comparative studies majors to theoretical tools, methods of investigation, and key concepts in comparative studies research and scholarship.	Comparative Studies major, or permission of instructor
CS 4990*	Senior Seminar in Comparative Studies	3 CH	Writing seminar based on students' independent research.	3990, 4XXX level course, or permission of instructor

Embedded Literacies*

Course	Title
Technology: CS 2340	Introduction to Cultures of Science and Technology
Data Analysis: CS 3990	Approaches to Comparative Studies
Advanced Writing: CS 4990	Senior Seminar in Comparative Studies

Embedded literacies are not part of the major; two courses that are required for the major also meet embedded literacy requirements.

Core Courses/Major Focus

The major focus consists of five courses (15 CH), selected in consultation with the student's faculty advisor. At least four of these courses must be Comparative Studies or Religious Studies courses and no more than two of them may be at the 2000 level. Those courses must be centered on a particular set of discourse, objects, cultural practices, or problems. Included among these Major Focus courses must be at least one 4000 level class that includes a significant research component.

Electives and Advising

In consultation with their advisor, students will choose four more courses (12 CH) to complete their major. Electives should complement the Major Focus but may add new knowledge bases or new approaches or methodologies.

Courses that may be used for either the Major Focus or the Electives may be found on the Advising Sheet and the Curriculum Map included with this proposal. These lists have been checked to ensure that none of these courses have been put into limbo or deleted from their department offerings. Our goal has been to offer as comprehensive a list of electives as possible, though we recognize that the availability of electives will vary over the course of a given student's degree trajectory. It is important to note that faculty advisors are essential in the CS major and minor process, helping students consider their available options in a given year. While Curricular Maps are necessarily useful documents, the CS department depends upon consultations between faculty advisors and students to ensure that the path toward a major is a living process, reflecting student growth and maturation of interests as well as the availability of courses in a given year's schedule. This stance of the major as a product of ongoing conversation is a hallmark of the CS department, and we see this relationality between faculty and students as another way in which the CS department teaches—another way they model the intellectual work of CS.

Part 3: Major assessment plan

Below is a plan for the assessment of the six goals of the revised CS major

- Goal 1 Students develop the capacity to analyze differences in culture and politics over time.
- Goal 2 Students develop the capacity to engage and analyze issues of community and social justice.
- Goal 3 Students develop interdisciplinary thinking and writing skills, and an understanding of relationships between disciplines.
- Goal 4 Students develop the ability to read critically and interpret a diverse range of texts, material artifacts, and/or performance traditions.
- Goal 5 Students develop the capacity for aesthetic and historical response and judgment of cultural products and modes of consumption.
- Goal 6 Students develop the ability to understand how ideas and cultural artifacts influence the character of human beliefs, the perception of reality, and the norms that guide human behavior.

Goal 1, Analytic Skills: Students develop the capacity to analyze differences in culture and politics over time.

Assessment Methods

Direct: Other classroom assessment methods

Comparative Studies coursework typically includes the analysis of texts, performance, and artifacts that illustrate cultural and historical differences; inclusion in syllabi of discussion and writing assignments that foreground those differences help students develop the ability to analyze them. We understand this is a long-term process and that some students will develop stronger capabilities than others.

Criteria: Criteria include evidence of students' contextualization of their analyses within specific historical moments and geographical locations. Because of the breadth of subject matter in the curriculum as a whole, some essays will emphasize these elements more than others.

Direct: Review of Mid-Level Course work

Coursework completed for CS 3990 (Approaches to Comparative Studies) will be reviewed to assess student progress towards meeting this program goal. This course is required of all majors and so provides a good mid-point for assessing this progress

Criteria: Criteria include evidence of student understanding of change over time and of the significance of cultural specificity. Reflection papers and the final project will provide the evidence for this assessment. Assessment Method Schedule: CS 3990 is offered every FALL semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Direct: Capstone course (reports, papers, and/or presentations)

The capstone course (CS 4990: “Senior Seminar in Comparative Studies”) requires graduating seniors to rewrite and expand a paper written for a previous Comparative Studies course. An evaluation of these papers should indicate some attention to these historical changes, although some essays will evidence more of that awareness than others, depending not only upon student differences in ability and commitment, but also upon the origin of the revised paper within a specific class.

Criteria: Criteria include evidence of students’ contextualization of their analyses within specific historical moments and geographical locations. Again, because of the breadth of subject matter in the curriculum as a whole, some essays will emphasize these elements more than others. Assessment Method Schedule: CS 4990 is offered every Spring semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Goal 2, Skills of Engagement: Students develop the capacity to engage and analyze issues of community and social justice.

Assessment Methods

Direct: Other classroom assessment methods

Because courses regularly encourage students to engage questions of cultural difference—race, class, gender, ethnicity, sexuality—from different perspectives and in relation to different historical contexts, the question of social justice arises regularly in class reading and discussion.

Criteria: Evidence from senior seminar papers, even those not showing direct engagement in social justice issues or community action, should show some awareness that the analysis of cultural differences typically reveals problems relevant to social justice issues. The capacity to engage in questions of social justice and community values will be strengthened by an understanding of relationships of power in local and global contexts.

Direct: Review of Mid-Level Course work

Coursework completed for CS 3990 (Approaches to Comparative Studies) will be reviewed to assess student progress towards meeting this program goal. This course is required of all majors and so provides a good mid-point for assessing this progress.

Criteria: Criteria include evidence of student ability to engage questions of social justice and community values, as well as an increased ability to identify power differentials. Reflection papers and the final project will provide the evidence for this assessment. Assessment Method Schedule: CS 3990 is offered every FALL semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Direct - Capstone course (reports, papers, and/or presentations)

Again, examination of final papers in the capstone course (CS 4990) helps us to assess whether majors as a whole are able to write both effectively and in a disinterested manner about issues that are related to social justice concerns.

Criteria: Evidence from senior seminar papers, even those not showing direct engagement in social justice issues or community action, should show some awareness that the analysis of cultural differences typically reveals problems relevant to social justice issues. The capacity to engage in questions of social justice and community values will be strengthened by an understanding of relationships of power in local and global contexts. Assessment Method Schedule: CS 4990 is offered every Spring semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Goal 3, Writing Skills: Students develop interdisciplinary thinking and writing skills and understanding of relationships between disciplines.

Assessment Methods

Direct: Writing assignment

Courses in Comparative Studies are intended to be writing and discussion intensive. Writing assignments enable instructors to evaluate whether students are developing the interpretive, reflexive, and analytic skills necessary for critical thinking and writing. Reviewing syllabi to be sure these assignments, while they will differ from course to course and from section to section of a single course, are present in one form or another (journals, reviews, essays, research papers, media presentations).

Criteria: Senior seminar papers should provide evidence that students are able to construct strong arguments that take into account the perspectives of more than one discipline. For example, a film analysis might include discussion of both the visual qualities of the film and elements related to the historical and cultural contexts of the film's production.

Coursework completed for CS 3990 (Approaches to Comparative Studies) will be reviewed to assess student progress towards meeting this program goal. This course is required of all majors and so provides a good mid-point for assessing this progress.

Criteria: Criteria include evidence of student ability to write clearly and persuasively, using evidence and arguments relevant to multiple disciplines. Reflection papers and the final project will provide the evidence for this assessment. Assessment Method Schedule: CS 3990 is offered every FALL semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Direct: Capstone course (reports, papers, and/or presentations)

Examination of final papers in the capstone course (CS 4990) enables us to assess both how much students can improve their papers in the span of fourteen weeks, and how good their critical thinking and writing skills have become by the time they leave the program.

Criteria: Senior seminar papers should provide evidence that students are able to construct strong arguments that take into account the perspectives of more than one discipline. For example, a film analysis might include discussion of both the visual qualities of the film and elements related to the historical and cultural contexts of the film's production. Assessment Method Schedule: CS 4990 is offered every Spring semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Goal 4, Critical Interpretation: Students develop the ability to read critically and interpret a diverse range of texts, material artifacts, and/or performance traditions.

Assessment Methods

Direct: Other classroom assessment methods

Courses in Comparative Studies require students to analyze some combination of texts, artifacts, and performance traditions, although specific content differs dramatically in keeping with the range of subject matter covered (from the fields of religion, literature, popular culture, folklore, science and technology).

Criteria: None listed

Assessment Method Schedule: Assessment of this goal is continuous in almost all CS courses, particularly emphasizes in the 3990 and 4990 courses which reflect upon and analyze the methodology of the major.

Direct: Review of Mid-Level Course work

Coursework completed for CS 3990 (Approaches to Comparative Studies) will be reviewed to assess student progress towards meeting this program goal. This course is required of all majors and so provides a good mid-point for assessing this progress.

Criteria: Criteria include evidence of student ability to read critically and interpret cultural production across multiple forms, including texts (understood broadly), material objects, and performance traditions.. Reflection papers and the final project will provide the evidence for this assessment. Assessment Method Schedule: CS 3990 is offered every FALL semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Direct: Capstone course (reports, papers, and/or presentations)

Examination of papers from the senior seminar capstone course (CS 4990) enables us to assess how well majors as a whole are able to interpret a range of cultural artifacts, but because the papers originate in different courses, they are likely to analyze and interpret some, but not a full range of texts, artifacts, and performances.

Criteria: Senior seminar papers should provide evidence that students have become critical readers of texts and critical analysts of artifacts and performances.

While papers may not include all three objects of study, they should show careful analysis of one or more of them.

Assessment Method Schedule: CS 4990 is offered every Spring semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Goal 5, Aesthetic and Historical Judgment: Students develop the capacity for aesthetic and historical response and judgment of cultural products and modes of consumption.

Assessment Methods

Direct: Other classroom assessment methods

Courses in Comparative Studies require students to make both aesthetics and historical responses and judgments to cultural products as well as to modes of consumption of such products, although specific content differs dramatically in keeping with the range of subject matter covered (from the fields of religion, literature, popular culture, folklore, science and technology).

Criteria: None listed

Assessment Method Schedule: Assessment of this goal is continuous in almost all CS courses, particularly emphasizes in the 3990 and 4990 courses which reflect upon and analyze the methodology of the major.

Coursework completed for CS 3990 (Approaches to Comparative Studies) will be reviewed to assess student progress towards meeting this program goal. This course is required of all majors and so provides a good mid-point for assessing this progress.

Criteria: Criteria include evidence of student ability to respond with historical awareness and aesthetic considerations to cultural products and modes of consumption. Reflection papers and the final project will provide the evidence for this assessment. Assessment Method Schedule: CS 3990 is offered every FALL semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Direct: Capstone course (reports, papers, and/or presentations)

Assessment Method Schedule: CS 4990 is offered every Spring semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.

Goal 6, Social and political consequences of cultural objects: Students develop the ability to understand how ideas and cultural artifacts influence the character of human beliefs, the perception of reality, and the norms that guide human behavior.

Assessment Methods

Direct: Other classroom assessment methods

Courses in Comparative Studies require students to situate the effects of ideas and cultural artifacts in specific historical contexts. Students learn to identify the complex field of possible consequences through the examination of multiple examples of these ideas and artifacts (through reading, viewing, listening, and even tasting) and through engaging with critical analyses of their consequences. Extensive in-class discussion and regular writing assignments allow students to practice and improve their abilities and to recognize the interactive and iterative nature of the relationship among ideas, artifacts, and beliefs, perceptions, and norms.

Criteria: None listed

Criteria: Senior seminar papers should provide evidence that students have become critical analysts of the interactive and iterative relationships among ideas, artifacts, beliefs and norms. Regardless of the specific content of their papers, all majors should be able to demonstrate their ability to recognize and interpret these relationships.

Assessment Method Schedule: CS 4990 is offered every Spring semester. This component of assessment occurs annually.
