Subject: Interdisciplinary Arts and Sciences Major in Leadership

Scott and Andrew,

The proposal from the College of Arts and Sciences to offer an interdisciplinary undergraduate major program in Leadership was approved by the Council on Academic Affairs at its meeting on June 14, 2024. Thank you for attending the meeting to respond to questions and comments.

The proposal will now be sent to the Ohio Department of Higher Education (ODHE) for review. It cannot be offered until ODHE approval has been secured. However you may advertise it acknowledging “ pending final approval by ODHE”.

The Office of the University Registrar will help you with any implementation issues.

I will now work with you, and others, on two broad implementation issues raised by Council members:

- The program will work other colleges, notably but not exclusively, with the John Glenn College of Public Affairs and the College of Food, Agricultural and Environmental Sciences, to ensure that clear and appropriate language about the various leadership major program distinctions is available to prospective students. This could include, but not be limited to, websites and promotional materials.
- Begin to consider how this, and related programs, might work to create a more unified leadership instructional model – possibly through the emerging Chase Center as its activities are established.

If you have any questions, please contact the Chair of the Council, Professor Fabio Leite (.11) or me.

I know this has been a long review process, but necessarily so. Thank you for your diligence.

Good luck with this new program

Randy

Overall distinction between ASC major and Glenn/FAES

The ASC Leadership major provides a liberal arts engagement with the concept of leadership as a scholarly subject, drawing on disciplines in the social sciences, humanities, arts, and natural sciences to provide students with a broad interdisciplinary approach to this important area of study.

Recognizing that leadership training is invaluable across all sectors of society, the overarching goals of the proposed Leadership major are 1) to provide students with a broad interdisciplinary framework for thinking about leadership, and 2) to provide them with the skills to translate this knowledge into practice in a variety of fields. The major includes a robust engagement with leadership grounded in the broader scholarly literature through the required core and skills courses. It also includes specializations which allow students to explore the theory and practice of leadership in a variety of settings. While students will have an opportunity to engage with specific dimensions of leadership through the various specializations, the core requirements of the major ensure that they will engage comprehensively with the concept of leadership through a liberal arts lens regardless of their chosen field. The proposed ASC Leadership major does not include specializations that explore public affairs management and community leadership, as those fall under the purview of the Glenn and FAES majors.

A student completing the ASC major will have the opportunity to explore leadership from the standpoint of the broad range of disciplines represented in the College of Arts and Sciences. In particular, every student will be required to take core courses spread across the humanities (history, philosophy, and women's, gender and sexuality studies), the arts (art education and policy) and the social sciences (political science and psychology). Through these core courses, students will engage important historical, social, and cultural issues related to leadership that are not covered in the Glenn or FAES majors. The proposed ASC Leadership major requires students to approach the theory and practice of leadership through these core humanities and social science courses as they pursue a specialization and develop leadership-related skills.

It is also worth noting that without the ASC major students interested in leadership who do not want to focus on public management or agricultural and community leadership would be required to complete very significant coursework on those very topics in the Glenn and CFAES majors. The following chart helps to illustrate this point:

Non-Elective Core Coursework
ASC	Glenn College	CFAES
Leadership “Core Courses”	Public Management, Leadership and Policy “Foundation Courses”	Community Leadership Specialization: Leadership “Major Coursework”

Glenn College major in Public Management, Leadership and Policy

1. The Glenn major is explicitly focused on preparing students for leadership in public management, as reflected in the description of the major found on its website. As already stated, the ASC major approaches leadership in a different way, and requires students to complete coursework that reflects the distinct contributions of Arts and Sciences disciplines to the study of leadership.
2. The “Politics and Law” specialization within the ASC Leadership major is distinct from the Glenn College major in two principal ways. First, students who pursue this specialization will be required to complete the core courses and will thus receive broad liberal arts training in the concept of leadership, as described above. Second, students in this specialization will not receive training in public management, as in the Glenn College major.
3. Here, we would emphasize the distinction between public administration and political science: where the former focuses primarily on the creation and implementation of public policy, the latter focuses more broadly on the analysis of political behavior, institutions, and values. The Politics and Law specialization explores the interdisciplinary questions which connect political science to related humanities and social science fields that are concerned with law, politics, political psychology, democracy, and social justice. This is reflected in the wide range of courses that may count toward the specialization, including for example courses on the civil rights movement in AAAS, on complexity theory in Political Science, on group dynamics in Communications, on Islam, Politics, and Society in History, and on citizenship in democratic Athens in Classics. Each of these courses offers important lessons both for students of leadership and for future leaders themselves.

Thus, for example, an ASC Leadership student specializing in Politics and Law might complete the following courses:

- HISTORY 3676: Leadership in History
- PHILOS 2390: Ethics and Leadership in A Diverse World
- WGSS 4403: Gender, Race, and Leadership
- POLITSC 3912: Political Leadership
- COMM: 4635: Communication Dynamics in Groups
- POLITSC 4784E: Complexity Science & the Study of Politics
- PSYCH 3325: Introduction to Social Psychology
- HISTORY 3220: The American Revolution and the New Nation
- PHILOS 5400: Advanced Political and Social Philosophy
- AFAMAST 3083: Civil Rights and Black Power Movements

Such a course of study would give the student a broad grounding in the dynamics of collective action and in the opportunities and challenges that those dynamics pose for leadership. This is just one example; other courses of study might emphasize cultural leadership, women in leadership, global justice leadership, leadership in American history, or many other topics that highlight the breadth of the Politics and Law specialization when compared to the Glenn Public Management major.

4. In our previously submitted materials we observed that it is possible to take one political science elective in the John Glenn Public Management, Leadership and Policy Major. We have learned that the Glenn College is in the process of eliminating this option. Going forward, this will only be possible through course substitution for students who are pursuing the Glenn major along with a double-major in Political Science. The relevant passage from the Glenn proposal is as follows:

Because our capacity has increased, we now offer several more advanced courses than when our undergraduate degrees were created. Currently, students are required to take one 3000+ Political Science course and one 4000+ Public Affairs course. We propose changing these requirements to students taking two 4000+ Public Affairs courses. Advanced Public Affairs courses are already designed to align with our degree goals. However, we appreciate the number of students who double major in Political Science and Public Management, Leadership & Policy and recognize that these students will be equipped to understand the intersections of political science and public management and leadership. As such, we will continue to allow these students to substitute one 3000+ Political Science course for one 4000+ Public Affairs course. Academic advisors will be able to make this substitution for these students as appropriate.

Thus, going forward all coursework in the Glenn major will be in Public Affairs, with no ASC courses. Likewise, the proposed ASC major does not include any Glenn College courses, or any course that overlaps meaningfully with PUBAFRS 2130: Leadership in the Public and Nonprofit Sectors. The majors are entirely distinct. They are designed to serve different student constituencies.

CFAES Community Leadership Major

1. The Community Leadership major offered through CFAES is similar to the Glenn major in that it offers a curriculum that focuses on specific areas of leadership – in this case, agricultural and community leadership, and extension education – which align with the mission of that college. The curriculum requirements document for the “leadership specialization” states: “The leadership specialization prepares graduates with the capacity to influence positive change, and prepares students for leadership positions in the broad field of agriculture and natural resources.” This objective is reflected in the major coursework listed in the chart above. All of the required courses except two (COMLDR 3530 Foundations of Personal and Professional Leadership and COMLDR 5430 Professional Leadership Ethics) are specifically focused on agricultural, community, and nonprofit leadership. Again, the range of disciplinary offerings in the proposed ASC Leadership major clearly distinguishes it from the CFAES Community Leadership major. Students whose interests and career goals are not aligned with that major, or with the Glenn major, will benefit from the approach taken by ASC to the study of leadership.

2. As we have pointed out previously, students in the CFAES major will obtain a Bachelor of Science in Agriculture, while ASC students will receive a Bachelor of Arts. These are distinct degrees, with different purposes and outcomes. Moreover, none of the courses in the Community Leadership major are listed as electives in the proposed ASC Leadership major, and the required courses in the CFAES major do not include any ASC courses. We note that the Community Leadership major includes a list of 12 electives of which students must take 2, and that list does include 3 ASC courses. Thus there is no overlap in required courses and minimal potential overlap in elective courses.
3. We would also emphasize that CAA has previously approved majors in other colleges that superficially resemble ASC offerings. For example, the CFAES Department of Agricultural Communication, Education, and Leadership (which offers the Community Leadership major) also offers a major in Agricultural Communication. In other words, at Ohio State the CFAES Bachelor of Science in Agriculture with a major in Agricultural Communication coexists with the ASC Bachelor of Arts with a major in Communication. Both colleges recognize that the two majors are intended to serve different student constituencies. We similarly believe that the existence of a Bachelor of Science in Agriculture with a major in Community Leadership should not preclude a broader Bachelor of Arts with a major in Leadership from existing in ASC.

Collaborations with Other Units

Clear messaging in our promotion materials will be the most important means of distinguishing our major from the other existing leadership majors. We will emphasize: 1) that our major is grounded in the liberal arts, 2) that it requires students to develop a broad understanding of leadership as a scholarly subject in historical and contemporary contexts, and 3) that it is designed to prepare students to assume leadership roles wherever their career trajectories may take them. Our advisors will be prepared to direct students who are interested in community leadership or public affairs and management to FAES or Glenn.

We note that there have been discussions about how we might coordinate the various leadership programs across the university. We are excited to be part of those conversations so that students interested in leadership can make informed decisions about which program is best suited for their academic and career goals.

Before we can bring this forward to the larger CAA group, our subcommittee will need clarification on the following items, which range from broad to highly specific in scope. Please address each item in your email response; if any item(s) would be better served to resolve in a conversation with the sub-committee, please let me know.

1. In referencing other Ohio State leadership development programs, the proposal inconsistently and insufficiently describes how this new program differentiates itself from others within the institution. In order to help the subcommittee understand how this program does not duplicate existing undergraduate degree offerings, please provide substantially more detailed information. For example:

- a. There is reference on page 8 that states that, when compared to the CFAES major, the ASC major “curriculum is anchored in the liberal arts, ...aims to serve students pursuing a substantial greater breath of careers, and...aims to prepare students with a theoretical understanding of leadership as a scholarly topic of interest as well as training in its practical application”. However, this statement reads more like a description of the proposed major, seemingly brushes off the goals of the CFAES curriculum (i.e., do you know that that major does not provide a theoretical understanding of leadership as a scholarly topic of interest and training in its practical application, for example), and still does not provide sufficient detail as to how it is distinctive from this CFAES major. Has there been discussion with CFAES to identify their major’s aims?
- b. Conversely, there is no comment whatsoever on how the ASC major distinguishes itself from the John Glenn College’s BA degree, and this should be amended. Has there been discussion with the Glenn College to identify their major’s aims?

This is a crucial concern. We do not yet fully understand how this proposed major distinguishes itself from other already established undergraduate Ohio State majors. In your response, please provide detail beyond a reference to liberal arts anchoring.

Over the last few decades, leadership has emerged as an organizing framework both for professional programs and for an interdisciplinary field of study with roots in psychology, history, political science, sociology, and philosophy. Aspects of leadership may usefully be taken up by different and complementary units within the University. This new proposal emphasizes the disciplinary roots and interdisciplinary connections of this field of study, while also reaching out to other departments where leadership has important practical applications. One key feature that distinguishes our proposed major is the greater theoretical focus rooted in the traditional disciplines that ground the field of leadership studies itself.

For instance, our proposal includes a new course entitled “Ethics and Leadership in a Diverse World” (Philosophy 2390), to be taught by faculty within the Department of Philosophy. It provides a sustained engagement with questions about the virtues of leadership, individual and collective responsibility, and justifications of authority. There is no comparable ethics course in the other programs mentioned, precisely because this proposal draws on the disciplinary strength of the Department of Philosophy. Similar points might be made about our new core course on “Leadership in History” (History 3676), as well as the breadth of offerings within Political Science bearing on the challenges of political leadership, and the strength of classes on organizational psychology in the Department of Psychology. This in no way challenges the approaches of other units in their training of students – a training which will undoubtedly continue to appeal to many students – but there should also be room for OSU students interested in a liberal arts approach to the study of leadership. This approach is firmly grounded in those traditional core departments that have defined the field of leadership studies from the earliest educational models in antiquity.

These principles inform every aspect of our major and make it distinctive. The core curriculum of this proposal emphasizes the ways in which disciplines in the liberal arts examine and understand leadership. For example, a psychologist is interested in how individual leaders will interact with others in an organization to advance their agenda. A sociologist is more focused on the larger organizational dynamics at play (systemic rules, institutional power dynamics, and the ways organizational structures shape institutional culture and success) that enable and constrain leaders. A historian may focus attention on the ways that applying different leadership strategies in particular historical contexts lead to different outcomes. In the context of the other leadership programming that are presently being offered on campus at OSU, that alone is distinctive, and we aimed to highlight that in our proposal.

This major also draws upon the many strengths of the College of Arts and Sciences to equip OSU students with an understanding of leadership and its properties. Importantly, we see this major as both a practical way to help students think about and become better leaders, but also a scholarly “deep dive” into the subject matter of leadership. Our proposed major is designed to function as any other liberal arts major. An economics major, for example, is expected to understand the various workings of the economy and central principles of economics while also identifying and pursuing broader areas of interest. Our proposed leadership major is designed to help students comprehend the central principles of leadership in contemporary and historical contexts, while also providing a path for them to pursue their broader areas of interest.

The curriculum, including the required capstone course, is intended to: 1) take advantage of the breadth of expertise on leadership as a subject of study that exists across our college, and 2) provide a coherent lens through which to understand leadership based on these different perspectives.

To answer your question in 1.a.: Yes, we have had multiple conversations with curricular leaders from both CFAES and the John Glenn College of Public Affairs (as well as other colleges). From the outset, we have emphasized our desire to ensure that our major is distinctive and complimentary to the curricula they offer. We have also emphasized that we find great value in: 1) creating opportunities for ASC students to explore complementary curricula in other colleges, and 2) creating opportunities for students working in other colleges to engage with the liberal arts as they prepare for their careers.

Recognizing that the Glenn College offers an array of courses that students pursuing this major may find to be of value, we offered the Glenn College the opportunity to add appropriate Glenn College courses to the ASC major’s curriculum. The Glenn College leadership was not interested in partnering. We made the same offer to CFAES. That invitation was initially met with favor. An earlier iteration of our proposal included a selection of CFAES courses, which ASC students would have been able to pursue for credit in the major. We have since withdrawn those courses at the request of CFAES leadership. The ASC major’s curriculum does include courses offered in the College of Nursing, the College of Public Health, the College of Education and Human Ecology, and ROTC. We would welcome the opportunity to establish meaningful connections with other colleges, including CFAES and Glenn, as the ASC major takes root and grows.

In terms of distinctions between our proposed major and the existing programs, we would emphasize that the CFAES Community Leadership major provides students with the opportunity to earn a Bachelor of Science in Agriculture. The major is an impressive program that is in harmony with the CFAES mission and provides CFAES students the opportunity to acquire an understanding of leadership principles in that context. The most recent (2023) curricular map declares that “The leadership specialization [of the community leadership major] prepares graduates with the capacity to influence positive change, and prepares students for leadership positions in the broad field of agriculture and natural resources.” Potential career options listed on the CFAES Community Leadership website include: “Leadership Development Specialist, Non-Profit Organization Director, Volunteer Coordinator, Member Services Specialist, and Training and Development Officer.”

The CFAES major appears to do an exceptional job of addressing the meaning of leadership and its application in the context of agriculture and natural resources. Our proposed major addresses the meaning of leadership in an interdisciplinary liberal arts context and it does not include an emphasis on agriculture and natural resources. The CFAES Community Leadership B.S. degree has been in place for 6 years and it is currently (April 12, 2024) serving 21 students.

The Glenn major, Public Management, Leadership and Policy, includes a set of courses that are tightly focused on public affairs. Only one of the required courses, Public Affairs 2130, “Leadership in the Public and Nonprofit Sectors,” addresses leadership as a titular subject. Public Affairs 2367 ensures that majors engage writing and communication in a sustained way, which is admirable, and which is emphasized throughout our proposed major’s curriculum (as is the case for many liberal arts majors). The Glenn major includes no requirement that pertains to ethics of leadership, nor does the Glenn major’s capstone project require an engagement with leadership.

The Glenn and CFAES majors, while informed by scholarship on leadership, are (rightly given the students they serve), much more focused on leadership in narrow sectors of society. Again, ours is intended to provide a broader survey of how liberal arts disciplines engage leadership and it leverages those perspectives to help prepare students for leadership opportunities in a range of fields and career trajectories. The programs that CFAES and Glenn offer do not provide the same flexibility. As such, our proposal is inherently complementary and not duplicative. A student who chooses to take advantage of our program and those offered by CFAES or the Glenn school would be that much more prepared when they graduate from Ohio State and pursue their leadership goals.

2. The appendix letter responding to the Arts and Humanities (AH) Subcommittee’s initial review indicates their contingency to “de-emphasize the double major”. It also references language “on page 4” of the proposal to address the AH Subcommittee’s request for more information about “how students will be prepared for careers and/or graduate school upon completion of this program alone, giving special attention to named career fields such as science, technology, and the arts that may require specialized knowledge in the field”; however, that language is not obvious. Related to these references, our CAA subcommittee has concerns about post-graduation outcomes, including:
 - a. Was the original intent of this program to be akin to a “co-major” whereby students would have the opportunity or even an expectation to train in a different field simultaneously? How would you respond to a concern that, as a single major, these ASC Leadership students are not developing sufficient technical expertise in a field (beyond the 18 credit hours of thematic specialization) that would facilitate their ability to lead within that field? The thematic specialization is not much more than a typical minor in scope, so it is hard to imagine students getting substantial content knowledge in a field (i.e., arts, science, health, business, etc.).

- b. The proposal references an overarching need for “excellent leaders” in our communities. Please share more information (including specific data where possible) about the job market demand for students completing this specific curriculum. Your response should be rooted on the premise that students are only completing this single Leadership major because that is only what is being proposed.
- To answer 2.a.: No, the intent of this proposal has always been to create a rigorous stand-alone major that provides OSU students the opportunity to engage in the sustained study of leadership from a liberal arts perspective.
 - The recent revision of the university’s general education curriculum created new opportunities for students to pursue multiple majors, minors, and certificates. In our proposal, we highlighted how a student may take advantage of these opportunities within the context of this major.
 - We do anticipate that a significant number of students who declare this major will also want to pursue other majors, minors, and certificates. In that spirit, an earlier iteration of our proposal mentioned that we wish to encourage students to pursue other interests and credentials alongside the Leadership major, but that has never been the driving principle behind this proposal. The AH Subcommittee’s suggestion that your subcommittee referenced was a helpful reminder to the steering committee that we needed to keep our proposal focused on our central objective, which has always been to create a rigorous stand-alone leadership major anchored in the liberal arts.
 - Students who declare our proposed major are required to complete 24 credit hours of specialization in leadership, including select coursework in the core, skills, and capstone categories. They are also required to complete a breadth requirement of 9 credit hours in one of 6 specializations, which directs their leadership interest toward a particular thematic area of interest. Again, this is analogous to many majors that have a core set of courses required of all students and a menu of elective courses to provide students the opportunity to branch out and focus on a specific subdiscipline. Our efforts to incentivize majors to pursue internship opportunities and co-curricular activities will further enhance the student experience by providing opportunities for meaningful professional engagement, mentoring, and networking.
 - Regarding the job market demand for students who complete this major, we note that students who graduate with OSU liberal arts degrees in such fields as classics, English, history, philosophy, anthropology, sociology, comparative studies, linguistics, religious studies, and more, emerge from their programs prepared for a great variety of careers. This is not because of the information they digest or any facts that they memorize. It is a product of the transformative power of the liberal arts. Their success is built on the critical thinking, research, and communications skills that they acquire while completing their liberal arts education. Our proposed major leans into this principle.

- For example, a 2017 study by the American Historical Association reports that history majors enjoyed a rate of employment significantly higher than the national average and that fewer than 1 in 5 history majors pursues a career in education. Rather, a disproportionate number of history majors make their way into leadership roles in business, politics, law, and more.
 - The present generation of students are expected to change jobs over the course of their working lives more frequently than ever – the estimate is now approximately every four to five years. According to a recent Pew Research Center study, this is largely due to a desire to pursue career advancement, better compensation, and professional satisfaction. The factors that contribute to an individual’s ability to achieve these positive changes have little to do with mastery of a particular body of information or a technical skill they acquired during their college years. It has much more to do with the knowledge, critical thinking skills, and communication abilities that our students acquire, and that provide a greater degree of agility over the duration of their professional careers. According to the Brookings Institution, “one hidden advantage (of the liberal arts) is that students learn general skills that last a lifetime, where the specific skills in more technical subjects often have a shorter shelf life.”
 - There is a recognized market demand for workers with the skills and knowledge that we aim to instill in our students. Without even having yet launched the major, our proposal has attracted the interest of Amazon Web Services. Last week, Amazon, the second largest company in the U.S., sent two execs to visit to our campus: Miriam Noble from Tampa, Florida, and Peter Fitzgerald from Seattle, Washington. These execs reported to Megan Skelly, OSU Director of Corporate Relations, that they are enthusiastic about establishing a relationship with OSU precisely because they find the liberal arts framing of our major to be distinctive and especially desirable. They indicated their intention to partner with us and accept an initial cohort of interns from our program as early as the next academic year. They further reported that the relationship is scalable with the ability to generate internships and mentor-mentee relationships for several dozen OSU students per year.
 - The University of Richmond Jepson School’s experience, addressed in the proposal, provides further evidence that a program such as ours will help students meet with success in the job market. The Jepson School of Leadership Studies reports a robust placement record in Fortune 500 companies, and across the globe. College Gazette has recently named the Jepson School the “Jewel in the Crown” of academic life at the University of Richmond.
3. According to the University Leadership Development Committee’s recommendations (2023), a more “unified, interdisciplinary institute dedicated to the advancement of leadership” should be developed; additionally, the mandate to create the Chase Center offers an opportunity to fulfill this recommendation. Acknowledging that the Chase Center is still being created, how do you see the ASC Leadership major fitting into the possibility and vision of a cross-college leadership training structure and pathway?

- While little has yet been decided regarding the Chase Center’s operational structures, we are enthusiastic about the potential for the Chase Center to serve as a central hub connecting OSU leadership programs, both public- and student-facing, across the university. Again, we would be enthusiastic partners with the other colleges that have engaged leadership in a meaningful way, as well as those that will do so in the future.
 - We would look to the Chase Center to organize and broadcast programming, including workshops and more, that would help our majors explore ideas, methods, approaches, faculty expertise, and opportunities in different colleges.
 - It seems likely that ASC units will partner with the Chase Center on faculty hires. This will create additional opportunities for alignment in faculty hires and curriculum around leadership.
 - Organizationally, the Chase Center stands to help elevate the recognition of OSU as a land-grant university that is living into our motto, Education for Citizenship, by helping OSU to train the next generation of leaders.
 - Perhaps most importantly, the Chase Center could help build and maintain productive alignments and partnerships between and among the various leadership programs across the university.

- 4. Please comment on the choice of “Leadership in Society” as a title for the specialization encompassing leadership within urban, arts, health, and sports sectors. This seems like an overly broad title that could be confusing to students. For example, would social justice and civil rights courses not serve society? For that matter, all of the specializations ultimately would appear to serve society.
 - Any confusion would easily be rectified through advising and promotional literature.

- 5. The program outlines robust program learning goals while offering students tremendous choice and flexibility within the curriculum. Please indicate how you will address challenges with appropriately assessing these common program learning goals with so much variability in the students’ curricular experiences.
 - a. Additionally, it is clear that every student will take a communications course, so that explains how program goal 4b will be addressed. Will everyone take a course that teaches modern research techniques (which would be needed for program goal 4a)?

- While the curriculum as a whole is extensive, please note that 24 of the 33 required credit hours that students are required to complete are contained within a menu of only 52 courses that constitute the programmatic core, skills and senior capstone. Compared to most majors, this is both focused and rigorous. The overwhelming majority of the major’s breadth is placed in the 6 specializations, which offer participating students the opportunity to apply their focused study of leadership in a thematic area of interest.

- To answer 5.a.: Yes, the capstone seminar is required for all majors, it includes a substantial research project, and it will include instruction on modern research techniques.
6. There is no reference to the delivery modalities of the planned curriculum. Is there a possibility that students could take more than 50% of the major coursework online?
- Our initial assessment suggested that this is not possible, but we are continuing to monitor this, especially as the modality of courses becomes updated. The objective is to offer this major as a traditional “in-person” program initially to ensure that we are meeting the needs of our existing students. Additionally, all but one of the core set of requirements are currently offered only in person, which would make online completion of this program very challenging. However, as the major gets established, the college is certainly interested in working with the team at Ohio State Online to create a thoughtful and coherent online program available to the residents of Ohio and beyond.
7. The proposal mentions that the History Department’s academic advisors will initially “administer the program and guide students in course selection based on their interests.” Please indicate what you mean by “administer” the program. Also, please comment on those advisors’ capacity to absorb this effort given your forecasted size projections and the choice complexity within the curriculum. In general, academic advisors across campus have tremendously heavy workloads as is, so the concern is how this important work is powered.
- By “administer,” we mean that the History Department’s staff, including the Academic Program Coordinator, Dr. Jen Getson, and the academic advisors who have worked with the steering committee to prepare the proposal, will help launch the major. The History Department’s lead academic advisor and Program Manager, Dr. Ray Irwin, has been involved in discussions regarding the Leadership major since the beginning of those discussions. He will help advise students as they find their way into the major. Dr. Irwin will then help to onboard and train additional academic advisors to meet rising student demand in the proposed major.
 - Additionally, the College of Arts and Sciences has hired Dr. Christa Johnson as an associate professor of practice to serve as Associate Director of the major. Dr. Johnson is presently the Director of the Ethics and Leadership Initiative at the University of Dayton, and she under contract to join OSU’s Department of Philosophy this fall. With a research specialty in ethics, her responsibilities will be primarily administrative but will also include teaching Ethics of Leadership in a Diverse World (Philosophy 2390), one of the core courses required for our proposed major.
 - The college has pledged to support this program, including the hiring of additional advising staff as it becomes necessary. In the past, the college has done this for other interdisciplinary programs.

17 November 2023

Dear colleagues,

I write in enthusiastic support of our college's proposed new major in Leadership, which was unanimously approved today by the Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee. The major promises to establish our college as a national leader in leadership studies grounded in the liberal arts tradition, and complements existing programs on our campus. Our combined curricular strengths, as well as experiential opportunities that cross college boundaries, can make Ohio State a destination for students and faculty with interests in leadership studies.

The proposed new major builds on decades—indeed centuries—of scholarship in the liberal arts focused on leadership as a social and historical phenomenon; on cultural variations in the expectations associated with effective leadership; and on the ethical and other obligations of leaders. The major is designed by arts and sciences faculty for arts and sciences students: it will appeal initially to students who might have majored in a relevant humanities or social science discipline in our college, but will also attract new students to the university who might otherwise have chosen to attend a liberal arts college. The multiple tracks it offers will, building on a shared foundation, enable students to tailor the major to their passions, academic interests, and career aspirations.

The new major is also interdisciplinary and collaborative at its core. It involves 30 of our 38 departments and schools, including several in the arts and the natural sciences, and has the support of the remaining 8. It has also been endorsed by the Colleges of Nursing and Public Health and by the Air Force, Army, and Navy ROTC programs. Finally, earlier drafts of the proposal benefitted from constructive conversations with the curricular deans from the Fisher College of Business, EHE, FAES, and the Glenn College. Although we are disappointed that the deans of those colleges chose not to provide concurrence, we have made some of the changes to the major that they proposed—sharpening its focus and coherence, and clarifying the ways in which our program distinguishes itself from existing pathways through those colleges. The ASC program has clearly articulated learning goals that are consistent with its liberal arts focus, and a well-developed plan for ongoing curricular assessment.

Indeed, the proposed major will be one of the few of its kind in the country. The program that comes closest, as the proposal discusses, is the major available from the University of Richmond's Jepson's School of Leadership. The programs share, in addition to a liberal arts focus, an attention to the ethical and social dimensions of leadership that is consistent with the land-grant mission of our university. Ohio State can also offer students, in ways that Richmond cannot, the resources of a major research institution.

The Leadership major, several years in the making, has already spurred significant curricular innovation across our schools and departments, as well as seeding new collaborations in research and engagement partnerships. It is also creating excitement among our alumni, several of whom are exploring ways to support experiences for students and endowed positions for faculty, and among employers eager to hire students with the broad sets of competencies developed in liberal arts majors.

Finally, Arts and Sciences is in conversation with other colleges that offer related courses and degrees, as well as with the Office of Student Life, to expand the experiential opportunities for students across the university with interests in leadership. Our varied degrees can all be pathways to these experiences and, together with opportunities for interdisciplinary faculty research, make Ohio State a national leader in leadership studies.

Dear Chair and Members of the Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee:

On October 11, 2023, the Arts and Humanities Subcommittee 2 reviewed a request from the Department of History to create a new undergraduate major in Leadership.

The proposed major has the goal of training students in “the core principles of leadership while providing them with a broad interdisciplinary grounding in the liberal arts.” In terms of its liberal-arts orientation, the major will provide students with an historical perspective about how principles of leadership have changed over time, as well as a philosophical grounding in the ethics of leadership in a diverse world, among other things.

The 33-credit hour major includes the following:

- 4 core courses (totaling 12 credit hours)
- 6 courses in a thematic specialization (totaling 18 credit hours)
 - 3 “skills” courses (e.g. communication, data analysis, design thinking)
 - 3 “content” courses
- 1 capstone seminar (totaling 3 credit-hours)

As detailed in the proposal, the major allows students to concentrate their coursework in one of six thematic specializations (two of which allow for sub-specializations): Politics and Law; Leadership in Society (Urban, The Arts, Health, Sports); Business and Markets; Military and Security Studies; Social Justice and Civil Rights; Science and Innovation (Environmental, Innovation). Each specialization allows students to take “skills” and “content” courses in a wide range of departments.

This interdisciplinary major will be overseen by a Steering Committee with colleagues from History, Sociology, Political Science and Philosophy.

A&H Subcommittee 2 voted unanimously to approve the request with nine contingencies and three recommendations. Those items have since been addressed by the unit and the proposal is now advanced to the ASCC with a motion to approve.

Sincerely,

THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

Arts & Sciences Leadership Major

Letter from the Program-offering Unit

September 12, 2023

Dear Colleagues,

It is my sincere pleasure to submit the attached proposal for a new interdisciplinary Arts and Sciences major in Leadership. I have developed this proposal in collaboration with the ASC Leadership Major Steering Committee, which includes Associate Professor Robin Judd (History), Professor and Associate Dean Andrew Martin (Sociology), Professor Eric MacGilvray (Political Science), and Associate Professor Piers Turner (Philosophy). My colleagues and I have shared this proposal with every ASC unit as well as several other colleges and units. This final version of our proposal incorporates the helpful responses and suggestions that we have received.

Yours sincerely,

Dr. Scott Levi, Professor and Chair

Proposal

Bachelor of Arts in Leadership

Required Information

Name of proposed major: Leadership

Major type: Bachelor of Arts

Delivery: In person

Proposed implementation date: Spring 2024

Academic units responsible for administering the major: History (ASC)

1. Rationale

Disciplina in Civitatem, or Education for Citizenship, is the motto of The Ohio State University and is the principle that drives this proposal for a new and distinctive College of Arts and Sciences (ASC) interdisciplinary liberal arts major in Leadership. Now and in the future, our communities require excellent leaders in every area. With 38 departments and nearly 900 tenured and tenure-track faculty, OSU boasts one of the largest College of Arts and Sciences in the country. We aim to leverage our size, quality of instruction, and extraordinary curricular breadth to create a rigorous major that will equip Ohio State students with the knowledge to understand a multiplicity of leadership models in historical and contemporary contexts, and the skills to become ethical, effective, and visionary leaders in their chosen profession.

We are committed to the principle that a liberal arts education provides an essential background for engaged and effective citizenship. The proposed Leadership major will immerse students in the core principles of leadership while providing them with a broad interdisciplinary grounding in the liberal arts. It will teach students to analyze how the principles of leadership have been applied in the past, and to apply those principles effectively as they confront the challenges of the future. Students will emerge from the major with a deep understanding of leadership as a scholarly subject and with a firm grounding in the substantive challenges and opportunities that they will face as leaders in their areas of professional interest. The ability to pursue both aims within a single curriculum makes the liberal arts approach to leadership distinctive.

Effective leaders must understand how to generate organizational change and growth. They must combine a depth of knowledge in their area of expertise with vision, self-awareness, and empathy. Leaders must make difficult, informed decisions, and they must balance the interests of their organization and the people it serves with the broader interests of society, both as it exists in the present and as they help to shape it for the future. They must be able to appreciate that the factors driving the problems they encounter are often exceedingly complex and shaped by multiple processes and that these processes are evolving over time. Leaders must be able to accept uncertainty. They must recognize when their decisions have put their organization on the wrong path and be willing and able to change course when necessary. They must also understand the cultural and political constraints on such changes. Training in ethics is critically important to engage these challenges conscientiously. Responsible ethical leadership requires a coherent understanding of moral principles, an ability to navigate difficult ethical tradeoffs, and an appreciation of the virtues that sustain good decision-making. Training in communication is also critically important. An effective leader must be able to understand their audiences, shape messages in a clear and effective manner, interact effectively and efficiently with individuals and technologies, and be able to build a coherent and compelling vision for their organizations and followers. The College of Arts and Sciences School of Communication is ranked in the top five such programs in the country. In working to face the challenges of tomorrow, leaders must also appreciate how inequities and injustices can bring people, perspectives, and values into conflict, and they must be able to learn from the past as they lead their organizations and constituencies forward. All of this and more is encompassed in the curriculum that we describe below.

We anticipate that the Leadership major will appeal to students with many different career objectives, and so we have designed it to be rigorous, flexible, and responsive to student needs. The major curriculum is built on a foundation of four required Core courses that engage students in leadership through their respective liberal arts-based disciplinary lenses. As part of the Core, all students must take History 3676, Philosophy 2390, WGSS 4403, and one of three options under Practice of Leadership. Departments will offer Core courses at least once a year and increase the offering frequency as the major grows.

We recognize that Arts and Sciences students will pursue leadership roles in an array of careers spanning many different professional environments, and so the curriculum requires that they take courses in one of six thematic Specializations. Specializations include:

1. Politics and Law: this Specialization includes a rich selection of courses in political science, history, and a number of other departments that will appeal to students who wish to pursue careers in politics and public service;
2. Leadership in Society: serves students who wish to pursue careers in a variety of public arenas, including civil service, public health, the arts, and sports;
3. Business and Markets: provides a menu of courses that will appeal to students who wish to pursue careers in business, as well as issues pertaining to domestic and international economic development;
4. Military and Security Studies: serving students who wish to pursue careers in foreign policy, military, and intelligence communities;
5. Social Justice and Civil Rights: serves students who wish to pursue careers that include public service, advocacy, and/or social justice activism;
6. Science and Innovation: serves students who wish to pursue careers that involve science and technology, and provides for engagement with the environmental sciences.

The major is designed so that each Specialization may include more restrictive thematic pathways. For example, the Leadership in Society Specialization includes pathways for students to pursue Civic Leadership, Arts Leadership, Sports Leadership, and Public Health Leadership. Similarly, the Science and Innovation Specialization provides students the opportunity to pursue pathways in Environmental Leadership and Innovation Leadership (see Appendix I for a full list of Specializations and Appendix II for a list of courses divided by Specialization).

The student's chosen Specialization will determine their menu of courses for both their Skills courses and Content courses. Majors will select at least three options from a menu of Skills courses that provide career-specific knowledge and training in data analysis, design thinking, and especially communication skills. Majors must select one communication course from the list provided, which includes courses covering such topics as professional writing and public speaking. Majors will also be able to earn course credit (ASC 3192, "Leadership Experiential Learning," which we will be submitting as a new course in Curriculum) for approved co-curricular experiences. For a student to enroll in ASC 3192 and earn credit for a co-curricular activity, the student must submit a request to the Director. That request must explain the ways that the activity in question meaningfully aligns with the objectives of the major and also affirm that it entails an amount of sustained engagement commensurate with a 3 credit hour course. Prior to awarding credit, the Director will confirm satisfactory completion with the relevant supervisor. If a student is interested in another co-curricular option, they must request approval, which must be granted by the Director in consultation with the FAC. In addition to the Skills courses, students select three options from the Content courses, which provide a wide range of options to explore their interests within their Specialization.

The Capstone Seminar will bring students together from across these Specializations and require them to complete a substantial and original research project that is aligned with their professional interests. In addition to creating an exciting pedagogical environment conducive to theoretical learning and the open exchange of ideas, these seminars will equip students with tangible evidence of their skills, a valuable asset as they make their way into the job market. The capstone seminar will also build on the sense of community established in the Core and Skills courses, and it will provide an ideal venue to assess the major and monitor its success.

The menu of courses for the thematic Specializations is deliberately broad, drawing courses from across ASC. As such, all students will create and maintain a Digital Learning Portfolio which will provide the framework for curating a cohesive personal curriculum, as well as foster a common experience for students navigating a broad and diverse curriculum. Initial Portfolio activities will include an introduction to the major's goals and Expected Learning Outcomes (ELOs), and a goal-setting activity to foster intentional thinking about the student's academic and professional goals. Early intention-setting work will help the student and advisor in curating courses to create a cohesive program of study with the student's goals in mind.

Each Core class will have at least one Portfolio activity that connects the Core's coursework to the key concepts and skills of leadership studies. These assignments will be required by the Core classes, with guidance and feedback from the Core instructors. Students will have opportunity to take further ownership of their learning with Portfolio activities related to the Skills and Content courses of their Specializations. Unlike the Core Portfolio activities, the Specialization activities will be self-guided, allowing students to forge their own connections between their Specialization courses and other major components. All Portfolio activities will encourage students to approach their Specialization coursework through a Leadership lens, thus ensuring a continuous focus on leadership principles across a highly diverse curriculum. The Portfolio will also include a dedicated section for the Experiential Learning, to encourage majors to enhance their skills, experience, and networks by engaging in relevant co-curricular activities.

Core and Specialization Portfolio assignments will vary in type but will incorporate various combinations of the following: knowledge checks of key leadership principles, synthesis and integration of ideas across coursework, connections to both major and personal goals, and metacognitive exercises and self-reflection. Developing the portfolio will prepare students for the capstone where synthesis and reflection are essential elements of the experience. Students will complete the Portfolio by adding capstone metacognitive assignments, as well as their final research project.

The Portfolio provides a venue for students to maintain a focus on leadership and synthesize their experiences. It will also create consistent opportunities to develop essential skills like writing, critical thinking and self-reflection. These repeated articulations of the value of their studies will also encourage individual engagement in the major. And in the end, students will have a product that is a meaningful representation of their academic experience that can also function as a launching point for further professional development in the professional and post-graduate world.

The Portfolio will also be valuable from an assessment standpoint, as an effective and efficient way to view student's work and development over time, through both their assignments and self-reflections. As discussed below, the Faculty Advisory Committee will conduct regular assessments of the major. The data retrieved will enable us to gauge student responses to particular courses and Specializations, and then revise the major accordingly.

Leadership will be a rigorous major that offers Ohio State students the opportunity to experience a deep interdisciplinary engagement with the liberal arts; develop strong research, writing, oral communication, and critical thinking skills; and use those skills along with the knowledge they acquire through their coursework to prepare for success in their chosen career. The major's Director, Faculty Advisory Committee, and advising staff will enhance students' academic experiences through professionalization programs and career fairs and further enhance their preparation for careers and graduate education through participation in internships, service-learning opportunities, and other career training experiences. While inherently valuable for all our majors, providing a deep and sustained engagement with the liberal arts will be exceptionally valuable for ASC students pursuing careers in science and technology, including healthcare and environmental sciences, as well as the arts. We expect that the Leadership major will have broad appeal among ambitious Arts and Sciences students.

2. Relationship to Other Programs

In 2019, a group of Ohio State University scholars interested in the intersection of the liberal arts and leadership studies first met to discuss the sustained engagement that several top tier graduate leadership programs in the United States maintain with history, ethical theory, and other foundational work in humanities and the social sciences. These OSU faculty members then began meeting regularly to develop an undergraduate Arts and Sciences Leadership major that would provide students with broad interdisciplinary training in the liberal arts while concomitantly immersing students in the core principles of leadership. They met with department chairs across the College of Arts and Sciences, deans and curricular deans at other Colleges across the University, and university administrators, to discuss the programs at OSU that engage leadership studies and the ways an ASC leadership major could complement the existing programs without replicating them.

There are presently four academic programs at Ohio State that engage leadership studies. Each program serves a particular constituency and provides that constituency with the opportunity to develop leadership skills and earn an appropriate credential. All of these programs are external to the College of Arts and Sciences, with none employing full-time faculty trained in History, Ethics, Literature, or Sociology. Each program exhibits clear distinctions from the others, and also from the interdisciplinary Arts and Sciences Leadership major we propose. We note that these programs tend to focus on leadership within a specific vocational domain (e.g. hospitality, ag. extension), whereas our proposed major provides students with the opportunity to conduct a much broader examination of leadership. Indeed, one distinctive feature of our program is its ability to present students with the opportunity to pursue leadership as a scholarly subject.

Beyond Ohio State, there is no shortage of Leadership programs. One can locate such programs at elite Ivy League schools, large public research universities, second- and third-tier universities, and small liberal arts colleges. These programs include certificates, minors, and majors, and they offer a dizzying array of Specializations. Considered as a whole, they are overwhelmingly tilted toward organizational leadership and aim to serve essentially the same constituency as the certificate that our Fisher College of Business administers.

We note that the faculty of leadership programs at Duke, Harvard, Rutgers, and a number of other elite universities include historians, philosophers, and scholars working in other liberal arts fields whose work centers on issues of leadership.

2.A. Ohio State Leadership Programs

- i. The College of Education and Human Ecology administers a Hospitality and Retail Leadership Certificate. This certificate serves students who aim to pursue careers in the hospitality industry, listing specifically “hotels, restaurants, event planning agencies, travel, recreation, buying, design, merchandise planning, product development, styling, marketing, trend forecasting and global sourcing.” The 5 required courses include:
 - CSFRST/CSHSPMG 2300: Branding in Fashion, Hospitality and Sport Industries
 - CSFRST/CSHSPMG 3910: Customer Experience Management
 - CSFRST/CSHSPMG 3950: Social Media and IT in Fashion, Hospitality and Sport Industries
 - CSFRST/CSHSPMG 4680: Strategic Management in Fashion & Hospitality Industries
 - CSFRST/CSHSPMG 3330: Corporate Social Responsibility, Sustainability & Entrepreneurship in Fashion & Hospitality Industries

The CEHE certificate includes no ASC course work, and the ASC Leadership major as proposed does not replicate any CEHE coursework. There is potential that some students pursuing the CEHE certificate may find value in the proposed major. Noting the CEHE restrictions on their major, we propose to award students who should wish to complete both programs with up to two courses (six credit hours) toward the ASC Leadership major for relevant CEHE coursework in the appropriate Specialization. CEHE has submitted a list of courses for inclusion in the ASC Leadership major. The Faculty Advisory Committee has mapped those courses into the appropriate categories.

CEHE also offers a number of courses that are included in the Interdisciplinary Leadership Studies Minor that CFAES manages and which is discussed below.

Substitutions to the curriculum will be approved through a petition process that will be approved by the Faculty Advisory Committee.

ii. The College of Food, Agricultural, and Environmental Sciences, Department of Agricultural Communication, Education, and Leadership, offers a B.S. in community leadership with a leadership specialization that “prepares graduates with the capacity to influence positive change, and prepares students for leadership positions in the broad field of agriculture and natural resources.” The required courses for the CFAES major include:

- AGRCOMM 2330: Perceptions of Agricultural and Environmental Issues
- AGRCOMM 4130: Publication Design and Production OR
- AGRCOMM 5530: Advanced Agricultural Communication Technology
- COMLDR 2530: Introduction to Agricultural Communication, Education, and Leadership
- COMLDR 3537: Data Analysis in the Applied Sciences
- COMLDR 4430: Leadership in Teams and Community Organizations
- COMLDR 5000: Community Leadership
- COMLDR 5330: Methods of Teaching in Non-Formal Learning Environments
- COMLDR 5380: Internship in Community and Extension Education
- COMLDR 5381: Capstone in Community and Extension Education
- COMLDR 5335: Volunteer and Human Resource Management
- COMLDR 5430: Professional Leadership Ethics
- ENR 3500: Community, Environment and Development

CFAES also oversees an interdisciplinary Leadership Studies Minor that represents a partnership with the College of Arts and Sciences, the College of Education and Human Ecology, the Fisher College of Business, the College of Food, Agricultural and Environmental Sciences, and the John Glenn College of Public Affairs. The minor has the following objective:

The interdisciplinary, undergraduate minor in Leadership Studies provides students with knowledge of leadership theories, principles, and concepts to better prepare them for success in future professional roles. The minor is structured to include theories and principles of personal leadership, team and organizational leadership, community leadership, and ethics and diversity. Students must complete at least one course in each of the five categories:

- Personal Leadership Foundations
- Team and Organizational Leadership
- Community Leadership

- Ethics and Diversity
- Capstone

The CFAES major explicitly focuses on training students for professional roles in community leadership and agriculture, and the minor tilts in the same direction. Both CFAES programs are designed to instruct students in the practical aspects of leadership.

The ASC interdisciplinary Leadership major is distinguished from the CFAES major insofar as its curriculum is anchored in the liberal arts, it aims to serve students pursuing a substantially greater breadth of careers, and it aims to prepare students with a theoretical understanding of leadership as a scholarly topic of interest as well as training in its practical application.

- iii. The Fisher College of Business runs a Leadership Initiative with enhanced training for women and veterans, administers the Dean’s Leadership Academy, and includes a five-course Certificate in Leadership. This program aims to equip students pursuing careers in business with an advanced understanding of organizational leadership. There is no ASC coursework required or offered. Students are required to take MHR 2210 and four electives. The curriculum for the certificate is as follows:

- MHR 2210: Personal Leadership and Team Effectiveness (*required)
- MHR 3211: Leadership and Character
- MHR 3220: Leadership Legacy
- MHR 4228: Organizational Coaching
- MHR 4235: Developing Leaders through Practical Exercises
- MHR 4236: Crucial Conversations
- MHR 4244: Negotiations

- iv. The John Glenn College of Public Affairs offers a Bachelor of Arts in Public Management, Leadership & Policy. The curriculum is driven by the principle that “leading communities toward positive change requires knowledge and skills in the areas of public management, policy, economics and public finance.” In addition to electives, this major requires students to take the following six Core courses:

- Public Affairs 2110: Introduction to Public Affairs
- Public Affairs 2120: Public Service and Civic Engagement
- Public Affairs 2130: Leadership in the Public and Nonprofit Sectors
- Public Affairs 3500: Public Management
- Public Affairs 3000: Public Policy Analysis
- Public Affairs 4030: Public Budgeting

Major requirements include one course on finance, the menu for which includes two courses offered by the Department of Economics. Majors are also required to take a course in the Political Science Department and a Public Affairs capstone course.

The John Glenn College of Public Affairs also boasts a robust level of public engagement, including a high-profile leadership lecture series, Leadership Forum: The Podcast, and a professional development Certificate in Public and Nonprofit Leadership. This twelve-week, six-credit program is “built for mid-career professionals working for public and nonprofit organizations. Participants must have a bachelor’s or equivalent degree.” This functions as a public-facing certificate designed to provide post-graduates who work in public affairs with an opportunity to earn a valuable professional credential. The Glenn College also offers a similar program specifically for veterans who are transitioning back into civilian life. These certificates serve post-graduate students and so they have no meaningful overlap with the proposed ASC Leadership major. That said, we find clear opportunities to develop pathways from the undergraduate ASC Leadership major into these post-graduate programs.

- v. In addition to academic programs, the OSU Office of Student Life runs the Buckeye Leadership Fellows Program. The objective of this highly selective program is to build, “in partnership with alumni and community leaders, unique transformative experiences for undergraduate students so they can achieve a competitive advantage in their post-graduate pursuits and remain deeply connected to the university.” The BLF program is open to second- and third-year students. While the BLF program does not include a formal curriculum, BLF students are offered the opportunity to participate in a variety of high-impact programs designed to provide valuable experiences, build professional networks, and help develop leadership skills. We anticipate that BLF students will express considerable interest in the ASC Leadership major, and we are eager to partner with the Office of Student Life on programming and instructional opportunities. BLF students will be able to secure credit for their work by signing up for ASC 3192, “Leadership Experiential Learning.”

2.B. Ohio Public University Leadership Programs

Public universities within the State of Ohio offer a variety of leadership studies programs, and these are described below. We note that only the University of Cincinnati offers a program that engages the liberal arts in a meaningful way.

- i. The University of Cincinnati offers an interdisciplinary Organizational Leadership major, minor, and certificate. This major serves as “an interdisciplinary program that combines a liberal arts education and selective business subjects with classes, guest lectures and seminars in leadership. The core curriculum of the ORGL program focuses on understanding theoretical and practical approaches to leadership.” The curriculum tilts toward business leadership, but the goals are broader than the other programs considered here. The major aims to provide “a coherent pathway for students wishing to become leaders across all sectors by targeting skill areas essential for leadership, organizational success and a lifetime of personal and professional achievement.”

- ii. Miami University’s Farmer School of Business offers Human Capital Management and Leadership major and minor degrees with a curriculum that “highlights understanding and implementing evidence-based best practices associated with human capital consulting, leading organizations, change management, employee engagement and motivation, cross cultural management, talent acquisition, employment law, compensation, executive decision making and strategy, and human resource management.” Their program aims to prepare students “for positions in consulting, leadership rotational programs, employee development, management, human resources, and other related fields.”
- iii. Ohio University’s College of Business offers a Strategic Leadership and Management Major (B.B.A.), which is “designed to create the foundations of knowledge and personal capability requisite to lifelong professional learning and career-long success in business leadership.” This organization leadership program aims to provide “a variety of rich developmental experiences that can include community service learning, individual leadership and emotional intelligence assessments, case analysis, research projects, team-based active learning project, and guest speakers, in addition to traditional classroom lectures and discussions.”
- iv. Ohio University’s Patton College of Education offers a Consumer Leadership Major (B.S.H.C.S.), which “prepares graduates for employment in areas such as workforce development, human services leadership, youth leadership (4-H, Extension Service), after school programs, early child care administration, corporate offices, and non-profit organizations.” The program is designed to train its majors to “learn and apply principles of consumer economics, financial literacy, and resource management; learn and apply theory and research on human development, interpersonal relationships, and family systems to build and strengthen individual family assets; know and demonstrate the role of food and nutrition in constructing a healthy lifestyle; and investigate and plan career pathways and research transitioning processes through the life cycle.”
- v. Bowling Green State University’s College of Education & Human Development offers a Leadership Minor Program “that provides students with knowledge and skills of leadership that can be utilized in a wide variety of careers.” The program is designed in such a way as to “be particularly useful for business, education, social work, health and human services, or political science students.” The same college also offers a Doctoral Program in Leadership Studies. The primary aim of this program “is to prepare individuals to exercise leadership that will transform the organizations they work within and thereby enable those organizations to attain specific goals and objectives as well as maintain their legitimacy within society.”

- vi. Kent State University’s College of Business offers a five-course Leadership Minor. Like other organizational leadership programs, the objective of this minor “is to provide students skills in understanding the business environment as a system of interrelated and independent parts, how to analyze the system to identify opportunities and challenges for addressing stakeholder concerns and skills for influencing others to work toward sustainable practices.” Kent State offers a similarly framed Graduate Certificate in Leadership and Management.
- vii. The University of Toledo’s Neff College of Business and Innovation offers a Bachelor’s in Business Administration (B.B.A.) in Organizational Leadership and Management. The program is designed to train future business leaders in four key areas: leading and managing change, leadership skills, emotional intelligence, and conflict resolution. The curriculum requires students to complete “a general core of business courses, and a specific area of specialization.”
- viii. Wright State University’s School of Education and Leadership offers a B.S. in organizational leadership. This degree “is designed for students with a two-year degree or its equivalent who want a broad academic background to prepare them for supervisory and management careers. The major combines courses in communication and administrative skills with the study of leadership theory and practice. Students will also learn problem-solving techniques and complete a leadership skills project.” The curriculum for this program is explicitly skills-focused and designed for practical application.

2.C. BTAA Leadership Programs

In addition to OSU, seven members of the Big Ten Academic Alliance offer a variety of types of leadership programs. Many of these are aligned with existing leadership programs at Ohio State. Penn State stands alone in offering a program that exhibits any significant overlap with the proposed ASC Leadership major. Their program is available to students only in an online format.

- i. Penn State University offers an online Organizational Leadership B.S. degree as well as an online Organizational Leadership B.A. These majors “draw on many of the disciplines of the liberal arts, as well as business and science, to illuminate the issues that all leaders face regarding work and employment issues in the 21st century, as well as in other aspects of organizational life more generally. Students select courses in crime, law and justice, political science, sociology, labor and employment relations, communication arts and sciences, management, and psychology. The goal is to provide a broad education that introduces methods of analysis used in the disciplines of the liberal arts and prepares students to understand complex social, cultural, and organizational issues that they will confront in leadership positions in the modern world.”

Penn State also offers a Sustainability Leadership minor “designed for students who wish to promote environmental, social, and economic sustainability in their personal and professional lives.” Additionally, Penn State’s Presidential Leadership Academy certificate operates with a mission similar to OSU’s Buckeye Leadership Fellows Program.

- ii. The University of Wisconsin-Madison offers a Community and Non-Profit Leadership B.S. degree that is aligned with our Glenn College programming. UW-Madison also has a Center for Leadership & Involvement with a mission similar to our Buckeye Leadership Fellows Program.
- iii. Indiana University, Bloomington offers a Public Management & Leadership B.S. designed to prepare graduates to “lead government organizations at the local, state, or federal level.” Majors “study public finance and budgeting, urban development and planning, and policy analysis.”
- iv. The University of Iowa’s leadership curriculum is largely focused on business. The Pomerantz Career Center and Tippie College of Business offer an Enterprise Leadership B.A. degree as well as a public-facing Leadership Studies certificate.
- v. Michigan State offers an Organizational Communication for Leadership certificate. Like our Glenn College’s certificate, this public-facing certificate is designed to provide desirable training and credentials for current leaders. The certificate program includes three courses: “Crisis Communication,” “Catalyst Thinking in the C-Suite,” and “Organizational Communication.”
- vi. Northwestern University offers an Undergraduate Leadership Certificate. The curriculum includes three courses: “Paradigms & Strategies of Leadership,” “Leading from Design,” and “Field Study in Leadership.”

- vii. The University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign offers a number of leadership programs. The Department of Political Science administers a Political and Civic Leadership minor that is aligned with the Glenn College’s major in Public Management, Leadership & Policy, addressed above.

The UIUC College of Agricultural, Consumer and Environmental Sciences administers an Agricultural Leadership, Education, & Communication: Organizational & Community Leadership concentration for the B.S. degree as well as a Leadership Studies minor, both of which are aligned with our CFAES programs.

These programs suggest that Ohio State has a need for additional leadership programs, like the ASC Leadership major proposed here, to remain on par with peer institutions in the Big Ten.

2.D. The Jepson School Model

There are many leadership programs in place across the country. Again, the vast majority of these are organizational leadership programs that focus on professional training and serve students who aim to pursue careers in business or are currently in such a career and in need of additional training and certification. One notable exception is the University of Richmond’s Jepson School of Leadership Studies (“the nation’s first-ever undergraduate school of leadership studies”).

The University of Richmond takes pride in being a top 25 liberal arts college and the Jepson School’s program offers an interdisciplinary model of leadership studies that, like our proposal, centers the importance of training future leaders in social justice and ethics, and requires them to complete rigorous liberal arts coursework. The Jepson School’s mission statement, purpose, and goals are as follows:

The Jepson School draws upon the liberal arts to advance the understanding of leadership and the challenges of ethical and effective engagement in society.

The study of leadership explores fundamental questions about who we are, how we live together, and how we influence the course of history. It exemplifies the spirit of the liberal arts: to educate people to take an active role in the world. The Jepson School helps students realize their distinctive capacities and apply their learning for the good of society.

- The Jepson School fosters students’ understanding of leadership and encourages them to lead lives of consequence that connect intellectual pursuits with moral and competent leadership.
- The Jepson School advances scholarly understanding of leadership, nationally and internationally.
- The Jepson School enhances public understanding of leadership.

These principles and objectives drive our proposal as well, and they distinguish our program from other leadership programs at Ohio State, across the state, and across the country. Both programs are built on the principle that an education grounded in the liberal arts – encompassing history, cultural studies, ethical theory, and the social sciences – is required for students to become thoughtful and responsible problem-solvers and leaders in organizations and society. The key distinctions between the Jepson School’s program and our proposed major are structural. They are an academic unit with their own tenured faculty lines and curriculum, whereas we propose an interdisciplinary major within the College of Arts and Sciences.

Another important distinction is that the University of Richmond is a small private school while we are a very large public land-grant university. The total undergraduate enrollment at the University of Richmond is under 3,150. Our College of Arts and Sciences is more than five times that size, our curriculum is considerably more expansive, and, once implemented, our program has the potential to make a substantially greater impact in training future leaders to serve in public and private capacities.

3. Student Enrollment

At launch, we anticipate that the major will admit approximately 50 students per year. In four years, we expect that the major will serve approximately 200 students.

4. Curricular Requirements for Completion

Major Requirements: 33 credit hours. Students must complete 11 courses totaling at least 33 credit hours. Students may count up to 3 courses (9 credit hours) toward another major program. Substitutions to the curriculum will be approved as exceptions.

The list of approved courses for the major includes a small selection of options external to the College of Arts and Sciences. Students may include up to 9 credit hours of non-ASC coursework toward the major requirements.

A. Portfolio

- Students must create, develop, and maintain a digital learning Portfolio.
- Core courses and the Capstone will have embedded Portfolio assignments
- Specialization courses will have self-guided Portfolio assignments
- Students will complete their portfolio during the Capstone seminar and submit the portfolio to the Capstone instructor
- Upon completion, the portfolio will be reviewed by the Director.
- If the student chooses the ASC Leadership Experiential Learning Option AND takes the capstone before taking ASC 3192, they will need to complete the Experiential Learning Component of the portfolio at the end of ASC 3192 and submit the portfolio to the Director.
- The Portfolio will be used to assess the major.

B. Core Courses: 4 courses for 12 credit hours

1. History 3676: Leadership in History (approved)
Embedded Literacies: Advanced Writing
2. Philosophy 2390: Ethics and Leadership in a Diverse World (approved)
3. WGSS 4403, Gender, Race and Leadership (title is currently being revised)
4. Practice of Leadership (students complete one of the following courses)
 - a. AAEP 5671: Organizational Leadership in Nonprofit Arts
 - b. Political Science 3912: Political Leadership
 - c. Psychology 2xxx: Organizational Psychology (currently 4522)

C. Specializations

C1. Specializations: Specializations will determine courses in both the Skills and Content categories. Students choose one Specialization from the list below:

1. Politics and Law
2. Leadership in Society
 - 2a. Urban Leadership
 - 2b. The Arts Leadership
 - 2c. Health Leadership
 - 2d. Sports Leadership
3. Business and Markets
4. Military and Security Studies
5. Social Justice and Civil Rights
6. Science and Innovation
 - 6a. Environmental Leadership
 - 6b. Innovation Leadership

C2. Skills courses: 3 courses for 9 credit hours

- Requirement: students must take 1 Skills course in the School of Communication

- Please Note: ASC Leadership majors are encouraged to participate in suitable co-curricular activities. Pending the approval of the Director and Faculty Advisory Committee for the major, they may earn up to 3 credit hours for suitable co-curricular activities by enrolling in ASC 3192, “Leadership Experiential Learning.” Suitable activities may include the following:

1. Internship
2. Service Learning
3. ROTC Deployment
4. Scholars Program
5. Mount Leadership Society
6. Buckeye Leadership Fellows

- Students may request approval for an unlisted option, which must be approved by the Director, in consultation with the FAC.

C3. Content Courses: 3 courses for 9 credit hours

D. Senior Capstone: 1 course for 3 credit hours

- ASC 4676
- Staffed by ASC faculty
- Enrollments will be capped at 24
- Students will enroll in their junior or senior year, after completing all Core classes, 2 Skills classes, and 2 Content classes. The Director must approve any exceptions.
- Students will build on their Core, Skills, and Content coursework
- Students will complete a substantial original research project
- Students will complete and submit their Portfolio
- The capstone will be used to assess the success of the major

As discussed earlier in the proposal, one of the strengths of the proposed ASC Leadership major is the breadth of expertise the faculty and participating units have in this subject area. This is reflected in the range of courses included in the six Specialization areas. While the steering committee has streamlined these course offerings somewhat to provide guidance for students, the goal of the Specialization is to allow students to chart their own pathway through the Specialization (though, as noted above, each Specialization does have refined pathways for students to pursue more structured courses of study in particular areas). Because all students will have completed the required four Core courses, allowing for a range of possible course options in the Specializations and pathways creates opportunities for students to customize the major to their own interests. The Portfolio will serve as the overarching framework for the major, helping students structure their personalized learning while providing a common experience for all majors that remains focused on leadership principles. Of course, part of the assessment process will be an evaluation of the Specializations, including the types of courses students are taking and their ability to navigate the options available to them.

5. Minimum Requirements for Admittance

All Ohio State undergraduate students in may take courses toward the major.

6. Administrative Program

The major will be supervised by a Director and a Faculty Advisory Committee (FAC) composed of five faculty members appointed by the chairs of the following ASC departments: History, Philosophy, Political Science, Sociology, and WGSS. If suitable faculty are not available in one or more of those departments, the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences will appoint a representative from another participating ASC department. The Dean will appoint one member of the Faculty Advisory Committee to serve as chair of that committee.

All decisions related to adjustments in the curricular requirements and structure of the ASC Leadership major will result from consultations with the Director and the Faculty Advisory Committee.

At launch, the History Department's academic advisors will administer the program and guide students in course selection based on their interests. As the major grows, we anticipate hiring additional academic advisors and professional staff to support the program and majors. On rare occasions, these advisors may approve course substitutions. Such substitutions will be done in consultation with the Faculty Advisory Committee.

7. Alignment with University Curricular Goals

The proposed Leadership major aligns with multiple university curricular goals, including Education for Citizenship, the General Education Curriculum, and renewed attention on workforce education. First, as noted above, this major supports the university's motto of education for citizenship. While it is important for citizens to understand the effective and appropriate role of leadership in a well-functioning democracy, with the rise of authoritarianism abroad and at home this knowledge is today more critical than ever.

Education for citizenship has also played a central role in the recent major revision to the general education curriculum undertaken across the university. The prior GE curriculum was a “cafeteria style” model where students selected courses from a range of categories, which varied across the different colleges. A major impetus for the revision was to develop one university-wide set of programmatic goals with a common curriculum. Central among these goals was education for citizenship. By supporting the university’s mission, the proposed major also supports the central educational experience that all students receive when attending Ohio State.

Beyond a general contribution to this new curriculum, the proposed major supports the new general education program in other ways. First, the new GE program is based on a set of basic courses that serve as a foundation for students to pursue more in-depth engagement of subject matter via a series of themes. These themes include one required of all students: Citizenship for a Diverse and Just World, and then an evolving set of optional themes that students select from: Lived Environments; Origins and Evolution; Health and Well-Being; Traditions, Cultures, and Transformations; Migration, Mobility, and Immobility; Sustainability; and Number, Nature, Mind. We expect the new courses developed for the interdisciplinary Arts and Sciences Leadership major to contribute to these themes, especially the required citizenship theme. For example, History 3676, Leadership in History and Philosophy 2390, Ethics and Leadership in a Diverse World, have both already secured approval for that theme. Additionally, the new GE program specifically allows for the addition of new themes, and there is discussion regarding the possibility of creating a new leadership theme.

Finally, OSU has made workforce education a key part of new curricular development. To support this, the university has partnered with a number of organizations across the state, including Columbus State Community College, Columbus City Schools, and JobsOhio. These initiatives span a range of academic programs, including health care, information technology, engineering, and the biological sciences. Recently there has been specific interest in developing new leadership programs. Obviously, this proposed major, in conjunction with the other existing leadership curricula described above, will provide the necessary programmatic structure to support this goal.

8. Major Program Goals

1. History and Theory of Leadership. Students examine historical and contemporary paradigms of leadership and analyze them according to the theories and principles of modern leadership studies.
 - a. Students distinguish acts of leadership from other forms of agency.
 - b. Students identify and explain various leadership styles and approaches.
 - c. Students analyze and evaluate the similarities and differences between historical and contemporary examples of leadership, using leadership theories.
2. Ethical Issues of Leadership. Students analyze and critique historical and contemporary leadership scenarios based on ethical principles reflecting diverse cultural perspectives.

- a. Students identify and explain ethical issues and concepts related to leadership within a variety of cultural, multi-cultural, and transcultural contexts.
 - b. Students identify and explain the responsibilities of leaders within a variety of institutional, organizational, and public contexts.
 - c. Students analyze and critique the ethics and efficacy of various leadership styles and approaches according to a range of cultural value systems.
3. Leadership in a Diverse World. Students analyze and critique the roles leaders and leadership play in hindering or advancing social justice.
 - a. Students identify and explain institutional and other systemic factors that affect social justice with respect to race, ethnicity, and gender.
 - b. Students identify, explain, and apply various methods for measuring equity within institutional, organizational, and public contexts.
 - c. Students analyze and evaluate strategies for intervention available to leaders within a variety of institutional, organizational, and public contexts.
 4. Practice of Leadership. Students apply a range of leadership tools, tactics, and styles in an ethical, equitable, and efficacious manner.
 - a. Students use a range of modern research techniques to identify, analyze, and evaluate the core ethical and social issues and the available means of influence existing within their own institutional, organizational, and public contexts.
 - b. Students use a range of communicative techniques to lead and influence.
 - c. Students articulate, analyze, and critique their own leadership style(s).
 5. Leadership in Context. Students meaningfully engage with principal themes and ideas of the student's chosen Specialization and forge connections that integrate leadership studies within the context of their field.
 - a. a. Students will be able to explain the basic facts, principles, theories and methods of their Specialization.
 - b. b. Students will be able to analyze, interpret and synthesize the relationship between the theories and principles of leadership and their Specialization.
 - c. c. Students will demonstrate a developing sense of self as a leader within their Specialization.

9. Assessment

Assessment will include embedded testing, evaluation of capstone seminar projects, graduating senior survey, post-baccalaureate survey, peer-review of syllabi and in-class observation of teaching, student evaluation of instruction (SEI) data. Student portfolios will serve as important sources for artifacts of student learning and reflections.

- Embedded testing: evaluates comprehension of key concepts and ideas.

- Evaluation of capstone seminar projects: evaluates mastery of theoretical knowledge and ability to translate into practical application.
- Graduating senior survey: evaluates quality of curriculum and student support.
- Post-baccalaureate survey: evaluates extent to which major has prepared student for post-graduate employment and/or education.
- Review of syllabi and in-class observations: evaluates quality of instruction as perceived by faculty.
- SEI data: evaluates quality of instruction as perceived by students.

Criteria for assessment:

- Embedded testing: 75% correct response on identified items.
- Graduating senior survey: 75% of respondents agree or strongly agree that Learning Goals were met; 75% of respondents agree or strongly agree that many faculty-taught courses were available to them, that instructors offered reasonably available office hours, that academic advising was reasonably available and helpful.

Timeline for implementation of assessment plan:

- Course-level assessment, including embedded testing, syllabus review, and SEI data will begin the semester the major comes into existence.
- The graduating senior survey will be administered annually beginning with the first graduating students.
- The post-baccalaureate survey will be administered beginning in the 5th year of the program and every five years thereafter.

Outcomes and program effectiveness:

- The Chair of the Faculty Advisory Committee will analyze and discuss trends in assessment data with the rest of the FAC and report to the College.
- The Chair of the Faculty Advisory Committee, in consultation with the rest of the FAC, will periodically confirm that the curriculum and courses are facilitating the achievement of the learning goals.
- The Chair of the Faculty Advisory Committee, in consultation with the rest of the FAC, will recommend changes to the major requirements (e.g. adding or removing courses) as appropriate.
- Faculty and advisors will meet with students directly to discuss their performance.
- Faculty will make improvements to course content, delivery, and learning activities as appropriate.

For a more detailed breakdown of the assessment plan by Goals, please see the chart below.

All Goals

10. Faculty Advisory Committee Regular Reviews of Major Program

The members of the Faculty Advisory Committee, or their chosen representatives, will meet biannually in conjunction with the undergraduate advisors to assess the major and course demand in order to jointly plan courses for the upcoming two years. An assessment of the overall state of the program will include the following topics:

- Assessment reports for the previous year, including completer survey data.
- Enrollment data. This will help gauge the need for expanded offerings and the potential for establishing a graduate certificate and/or 3+2 or 4+1 BA/MA programs.
- Other quantitative data of students completing the major (e.g., demographic data, GPA, overall performance in major courses, overall student performance indicated by annual evaluation of student artifacts).
- Overall quality of courses and student satisfaction with individual courses as measured by SEIs, any informal student evaluations, and/or peer reviews.
- Surveys of graduates.
- Informal surveys of alumni.

Major Advising Sheet

II.1. List of courses divided by Specialization, Skills, and Content Courses

Arts & Sciences (ASC) Leadership Major

Major Requirements: 33 credit hours

- Students take 11 courses totaling 33 credit hours.
- Students choose a Specialization, and then take Skills and Content courses in that category.
- Students create and maintain a Digital Learning Portfolio, to be turned in at the completion of the Capstone.
- Students may include up to 9 credit hours of non-ASC coursework toward the major requirements.
- Substitutions to the curriculum will be approved as exceptions.
- Students with double majors should speak to their advisors about the possibility of crossing courses between majors. Please note that cross-counting courses in this way requires the approval of both departments.

Digital Learning Portfolio

_____ Portfolio

- Students will submit their portfolio to the Capstone Instructor at the end of the Capstone seminar.
- If a student completes ASC 3192 after the Capstone, they must revise the portfolio to include the Experiential Learning component, then turn in the portfolio to the Director at the end of ASC 3192.

Subject: Request for AAAS Concurrence, Major in Leadership Studies

Dear Leke and Ryan,

I am writing on behalf of a group of faculty from across the College of Arts & Sciences to request your unit's concurrence for a new interdisciplinary liberal arts major in Leadership Studies.

The central aim of the Leadership major is to provide OSU students the opportunity to engage deeply with the liberal arts and acquire the knowledge, contexts, and skills to rise into leadership roles wherever their careers may take them. With courses from 28 ASC units and several external partners (e.g. College of Nursing, College of Public Health, and College of Education and Human Ecology), the Leadership major is highly interdisciplinary. We have also designed it to be flexible, as well as rigorous, as we expect a significant number of students will choose it as a second major.

The curriculum includes four required courses that approach leadership from different disciplinary perspectives; a menu of skills courses; a set of six thematic specialization (students choose three courses from one specialization); and a senior capstone seminar. Two of the four core courses have been designed specifically for the major, while the skills and thematic specializations encourage students to explore the breadth and depth of the Arts and Sciences. We have also designed the major to incentivize student engagement with meaningful co-curricular activities.

You can find additional information about the major in the attached proposal and curricular spreadsheet.

We hope that you will be willing to provide a concurrence within the next two weeks. OAA rules stipulate that a concurrence will be assumed if there is no response within two weeks of the request. That said, please do let me know if you require additional time to confer with your colleagues prior to responding. Please also don't hesitate to let me know if you have any questions, or if you would like any additional information.

With thanks,
Scott

Dear Scott and Debra,

Just a gentle reminder that we hope to have concurrences collected by the end of the day today. Silence is interpreted as a yes, but as we expect to encounter a bit of resistance outside of ASC every tangible “yes” holds value. No problem, of course, if you need a bit longer.

Hi Scott,

Thanks for the opportunity to provide concurrence on this proposed major. Chemistry and Biochemistry does not have any concerns about this and concur with the proposal.

I think we had mentioned before our course on the Science and Policy of Drug Development course that we are developing, which is currently under review to be offered as a CHEM/PHRM 3301 cross-listed course in SP23 (3 credits). I am hoping that it will be approved as a GE Theme course soon, and this might be a good option for you to include in your Science track. If you are interested in this, please let me know and thanks.

Dear Scott,

Just to add to what Mark has said: we're very impressed and excited by the new Leadership Studies program, so much so that we'd very much like to be fully involved, and we ask that you include Classics as a participating department. As you may know, Classics has undergone a significant change in its faculty within the last year, and we have been busy updating our undergraduate curriculum. We currently have several new courses either approved or pending approval that would fit neatly within the Specializations portion of the Leadership major:

- 3210 Classics and African American Political Thought (Social Justice and Civil Rights)
- 3XXX Citizenship in Democratic Athens (Politics and Law)
- 3XXX Law, Empire and Citizenship in Later Rome (Politics and Law)

We'd be more comfortable in offering our department's concurrence provided that you could list Classics as a participating department within your proposal. I'd be happy to have send over a list of the courses that might fit the various Specializations, and discuss how Classics might fully support and play a role in your exciting new endeavour.

All the best,
Alan

Dear Barry and Spencer,

I am writing on behalf of a group of faculty from across the College of Arts & Sciences to request your unit's concurrence for a new interdisciplinary liberal arts major in Leadership Studies.

The central aim of the Leadership major is to provide OSU students the opportunity to engage deeply with the liberal arts and acquire the knowledge, contexts, and skills to rise into leadership roles wherever their careers may take them. With courses from 28 ASC units and several external partners (e.g. College of Nursing, College of Public Health, and College of Education and Human Ecology), the Leadership major is highly interdisciplinary. We have also designed it to be flexible, as well as rigorous, as we expect a significant number of students will choose it as a second major.

The curriculum includes four required courses that approach leadership from different disciplinary perspectives; a menu of skills courses; a set of six thematic specialization (students choose three courses from one specialization); and a senior capstone seminar. Two of the four core courses have been designed specifically for the major, while the skills and thematic specializations encourage students to explore the breadth and depth of the Arts and Sciences. We have also designed the major to incentivize student engagement with meaningful co-curricular activities.

You can find additional information about the major in the attached proposal and curricular spreadsheet.

We hope that you will be willing to provide a concurrence within the next two weeks. OAA rules stipulate that a concurrence will be assumed if there is no response within two

Dear Scott,

I maintain my previous remark that the place made to the creative disciplines is “buried” down in the track that you named “Leadership in Society” in this final expression of the project.

I would prefer to see this called “Leadership of Creatives”, or “Leadership of creative fields”

Other than that, you got it!

No, that track is very much still there. If you open the spreadsheet you'll see it along the bottom, Tab 2.B. The Arts Pathway is what we're calling it. I've also agreed to help fund a new Arts Leadership course that one of Laura's colleagues is creating, and which is I believe still in the works.

Please let me know if any of that remains unclear. I assure you that we are most definitely not backing away from arts leadership!

The Ohio State University occupies land that is the ancestral and contemporary territory of the Shawnee, Potawatomi, Delaware, Miami, Peoria, Seneca, Wyandotte, Ojibwe and Cherokee peoples. The university resides on land ceded in the 1795 Treaty of Greenville and the forced removal of tribes through the Indian Removal Act of 1830.

The Ohio State University is a land grant institution. Land grants nationwide received funding through the 1862 Morrill Act, which gave so-called 'public' land taken from tribal nations to states to seed institutions of higher education. The Ohio State University was funded through the sale of 630,000 acres of 'public' land, carefully documented at <https://www.landgrabu.org/universities>

Subject: Request for History Concurrence, Major in Leadership Studies

Dear Birgitte,

I am writing on behalf of a group of faculty from across the College of Arts & Sciences to request ~~your~~ our unit's concurrence (😊) for a new interdisciplinary liberal arts major in Leadership Studies.

The central aim of the Leadership major is to provide OSU students the opportunity to engage deeply with the liberal arts and acquire the knowledge, contexts, and skills to rise into leadership roles wherever their careers may take them. With courses from 28 ASC units and several external partners (e.g. College of Nursing, College of Public Health, and College of Education and Human Ecology), the Leadership major is highly interdisciplinary. We have also designed it to be flexible, as well as rigorous, as we expect a significant number of students will choose it as a second major.

The curriculum includes four required courses that approach leadership from different disciplinary perspectives; a menu of skills courses; a set of six thematic specialization (students choose three courses from one specialization); and a senior capstone seminar. Two of the four core courses have been designed specifically for the major, while the skills and thematic specializations encourage students to explore the breadth and depth of the Arts and Sciences. We have also designed the major to incentivize student engagement with meaningful co-curricular activities.

You can find additional information about the major in the attached proposal and curricular spreadsheet.

We hope that you will be willing to provide a concurrence within the next two weeks. OAA rules stipulate that a concurrence will be assumed if there is no response within two weeks of the request. That said, please do let me know if you require additional time to confer with your colleagues prior to responding. Please also don't hesitate to let me know if you have any questions, or if you would like any additional information.

Dear Angela and Ludmila,

I am writing on behalf of a group of faculty from across the College of Arts & Sciences to request your unit's concurrence for a new interdisciplinary liberal arts major in Leadership Studies.

The central aim of the Leadership major is to provide OSU students the opportunity to engage deeply with the liberal arts and acquire the knowledge, contexts, and skills to rise into leadership roles wherever their careers may take them. With courses from 28 ASC units and several external partners (e.g. College of Nursing, College of Public Health, and College of Education and Human Ecology), the Leadership major is highly interdisciplinary. We have also designed it to be flexible, as well as rigorous, as we expect a significant number of students will choose it as a second major.

The curriculum includes four required courses that approach leadership from different disciplinary perspectives; a menu of skills courses; a set of six thematic specialization (students choose three courses from one specialization); and a senior capstone seminar. Two of the four core courses have been designed specifically for the major, while the skills and thematic specializations encourage students to explore the breadth and depth of the Arts and Sciences. We have also designed the major to incentivize student engagement with meaningful co-curricular activities.

You can find additional information about the major in the attached proposal and

Dear Scott,

Thank you so much for sending this to us. We looked at the Leadership Studies major proposal with great interest, and we are very excited for the opportunities it can bring. Particularly, we believe that some of SPPO's programs and courses could really complement the major. For example, our Spanish minor for business courses, our service-learning course (Span 5689s) and our forthcoming internship courses could be great opportunities for students pursuing the Leadership Studies major in the Business and Markets thematic specialization. I'm sure that with time we could think of other options for the new major.

That said, we are happy to provide our concurrence. Please do not hesitate to reach out to us as we the proposal moves forward.

Hi Scott and Andrew.

This quick note to say that Statistics concurs with the planned major in Leadership Studies. In fact, I am enthusiastic about the major and I believe that it will bring much to Ohio State and its students.

In the short run, get the major up and running. In the long run, if there are opportunities for a connection with Statistics (e.g., in how leaders can effectively couple an understanding of the world/their situation and data to make informed decisions), I hope that we can participate!

My best,

Steve

Sure, Scott, you have the concurrence of GLL. Sounds like a fine addition to the majors for OSU students.

Subject: Request for Germanic Concurrence, Major in Leadership Studies

Dear Bob and Matthew,

I am writing on behalf of a group of faculty from across the College of Arts & Sciences to request your unit's concurrence for a new interdisciplinary liberal arts major in Leadership Studies.

The central aim of the Leadership major is to provide OSU students the opportunity to engage deeply with the liberal arts and acquire the knowledge, contexts, and skills to rise into leadership roles wherever their careers may take them. With courses from 28 ASC units and several external partners (e.g. College of Nursing, College of Public Health, and College of Education and Human Ecology), the Leadership major is highly interdisciplinary. We have also designed it to be flexible, as well as rigorous, as we expect a significant number of students will choose it as a second major.

The curriculum includes four required courses that approach leadership from different disciplinary perspectives; a menu of skills courses; a set of six thematic specialization

(students choose three courses from one specialization); and a senior capstone seminar. Two of the four core courses have been designed specifically for the major, while the skills and thematic specializations encourage students to explore the breadth and depth of the Arts and Sciences. We have also designed the major to incentivize student engagement with meaningful co-curricular activities.

You can find additional information about the major in the attached proposal and curricular spreadsheet.

We hope that you will be willing to provide a concurrence within the next two weeks. OAA rules stipulate that a concurrence will be assumed if there is no response within two weeks of the request. That said, please do let me know if you require additional time to confer with your colleagues prior to responding. Please also don't hesitate to let me know if you have any questions, or if you would like any additional information.

With thanks,
Scott

Re: Arts and Sciences proposal for Bachelor of Arts in Leadership

As the deans of four colleges that offer leadership curricula, we write in response to the College of Arts and Sciences proposal for a Bachelor of Arts in Leadership. We responded with non-concurrence to an earlier version of this proposal because it ran counter to the opportunity to build a university-wide, interdisciplinary approach to leadership curricular offerings at Ohio State. We also identified several concerns with the previous proposal (see accompanying previous letter).

Three notable developments have occurred since Arts and Sciences offered the original proposal:

- A group of faculty and staff from Arts and Sciences, the Office of Student Life, and our four colleges (University Leadership Development Committee) convened to explore collaborative opportunities;
- Arts and Sciences revised its proposal; and
- The Ohio legislature mandated the creation of the Salmon P. Chase Center for Civics, Culture, and Society at Ohio State to offer curricula in civics and civic leadership rooted in the history and founding of the United States.

We have waited to offer a response to the new Arts and Sciences proposal so that we could learn more about these ongoing developments, notably the soon-to-be-launched Chase Center.

We remain excited about the entrance of the College of Arts and Sciences into the study and teaching of leadership at Ohio State. As we noted in our original letter, many disciplines within Arts and Sciences (notably those that form the core of the proposal – History; Philosophy; Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies) have much to offer to the scholarship and teaching of leadership. The University Leadership Development Committee highlighted the need for leadership education and the exciting possibilities that could come from connecting our disciplines around this area of study and practice.

At the same time, our fundamental concern remains about the continued proliferation of leadership offerings and the lost opportunity to collaborate. There is a possibility that the proposed Arts and Sciences degree will soon be followed by a similar proposal from the Chase Center (which is mandated by state law to offer curricula). The University Leadership Development Committee also underscored the current fragmented and siloed leadership landscape at Ohio State, and recommended a unified, interdisciplinary approach to the advancement of leadership, along with the creation of a unit with a physical presence to serve as the coordinator.

Given these developments, we offer neither concurrence nor non-concurrence for the proposed Arts and Sciences degree. We are very supportive of Arts and Sciences participating in the offering of leadership curriculum, but we are not supportive of the proliferation of offerings that duplicate existing curriculum.

We recommend that the Council on Academic Affairs explore two pathways to advance undergraduate leadership curricula at Ohio State:

1. Develop an interdisciplinary leadership degree

CAA could charge the five colleges and the Office of Student Life to collaborate on the development of a distinctly unique leadership curricular offering at the Ohio State University that harnesses the breadth and depth of the liberal arts across relevant departments in the College of Arts and Sciences; the extensive experience and research expertise within the professional colleges; and the abundant leadership engagement opportunities for students in the Office of Student Life.

As noted in the material provided by the College of Arts and Sciences, Penn State is the only university in the Big Ten Academic Alliance that offers an interdisciplinary leadership degree. Ohio State could become one of the premiere universities for leadership curricula within the Big Ten and across the nation.

Such a collaborative approach would also set the table for a positive engagement with curriculum developed by the Chase Center. Rather than continuing the proliferation of duplicative curriculum, such a process would promote collaboration and coordination in this area of teaching and learning. This could spill over into other areas where the Chase Center might offer curriculum (e.g., history, civics).

Creating a collaborative process would likely cause our four colleges to revise existing curriculum to support a robust interdisciplinary degree. For example, the existing interdisciplinary leadership studies minor offered through the College of Food, Agriculture, and Environmental Sciences could become directly aligned with a new interdisciplinary degree. The Glenn College's BA in Public Management, Policy, and Leadership could change to focus on management and policy in the public sector.

2. More clearly establish the distinctions between degrees and eliminate duplication

CAA could take on the role of ensuring that leadership offerings are distinctly different from each other, and that new degrees do not replicate existing offerings.

The advantage of this approach is that it would provide students with a variety of choices about how to pursue leadership studies and offer a clearer articulation of what specifically is distinct about each offering. This approach would also establish bright lines for future curriculum development (e.g., from the Chase Center); developers of new curriculum would have a clear sense of what's already covered by existing degree offerings and where there is room for innovation.

The downside of this approach is that it will require a more robust curricular coordination and review process than is currently in place. Absent clear delineation between the degrees, the risk of this approach is continued duplication and redundancy. Furthermore, this approach might lead to several low enrolled degree programs as students interested in leadership spread themselves over multiple offerings, whereas an interdisciplinary partnership could lead to a robustly enrolled single degree.

To pursue this differentiation approach, CAA could guide the colleges to clearly specify areas of distinction and look to reduce areas of overlap with existing offerings. To start, each college could be charged to clearly articulate its specific approach to the teaching and learning of leadership. For example, the John Glenn College of Public Affairs' BA in Public Management, Policy, and Leadership prepares students for leadership roles in the public and nonprofit sectors. This could be at the forefront of describing the degree. For the proposed Arts and Sciences degree, it could more clearly explain the liberal arts approach and how this approach prepares leaders (the accompanying previous letter identifies areas in the proposal where that explanation could be provided).

One area where CAA could request degrees to be more precise is in the types of roles for which they are preparing leaders. All the degrees – both those proposed by Arts and Sciences and the existing degrees – focus on preparing students for leadership in organizational roles. That is not a distinction of any one degree, although Fisher can make the case that it prepares students for leadership in private work organizations, EHE for education organizations, and Glenn for public and nonprofit organizations. Contrary to the characterization in the Arts and Sciences proposal, the CFAES interdisciplinary leadership studies minor prepares students for team, organization, and community leadership; it is not specific to agricultural organizations.

Another area where differentiation could be clearer is in the overlap of sectors and domains covered in specializations and concentrations. The Arts and Sciences proposal includes specializations in a variety of areas that are already covered in other parts of the university. For example, health leadership is available in several of the health colleges; urban leadership is covered in the Glenn College's local government specialization/minor; business and markets are covered in Fisher's offerings. Arts and Sciences could focus on specializations that are currently uncovered, like the proposal's plan to focus on the arts.

Finally, as we noted in the previous letter, CAA could also require that each degree clearly specify its distinctive character in its titling. Students will struggle to understand the differences if each of the colleges offers degrees with a general leadership title. For example, CFAES's minor draws courses from Arts and Sciences and the professional colleges so it could be retitled as an Interdisciplinary Minor in Leadership. Given that the current proposal from Arts and Sciences emphasizes its liberal arts core, it could be titled Leadership from a Liberal Arts Perspective or Leadership in the Liberal Arts.

As we stated previously, we are firmly in favor of collaboration and interdisciplinarity, so our preference is for the first approach. If CAA opts to move forward with approving another leadership degree, then we strongly request a process that leads to the differentiation described in option two.

These two approaches are not mutually exclusive. CAA could recommend that these five units work collaboratively to distinguish each offering from the other and simultaneously explore ways to coordinate and collaborate. This would also create a process into which curricula from the Chase Center could connect when that Center is ready to offer curriculum.

Problem Statement

Organizations in our community and beyond are facing an existential leadership crisis.

According to Forbes, organizations in the United States spend upwards of $166B each year on leadership development training. Despite this, 77% of organizations report they are currently experiencing a leadership gap (Center for Creative Leadership) and only 12% of HR Leaders feel they have a strong leadership pool (2023 Global Leadership Forecast).

Given the leadership crisis facing these organizations, many have turned to recent college graduates to help fill their skill and talent gaps. The organizations are heavily emphasizing leadership skills in their hiring processes, with a particular focus on graduates who demonstrate (NACE, 2021):

- Teamwork (78% of employers)
- Problem solving skills (77% of employers)
- Effective communication skills (75% of employers)
- Leadership through extracurricular experiences (72.5% of employers)

Unfortunately, employers are finding out that another gap exists between where they need graduates to be at in their leadership skills and where graduates are. In fact, nearly 3 in 4 employers say they have a hard time finding graduates with the leadership skills their companies need (Society for Human Resource Management).

Addressing this leadership crisis will be one of the top priorities for organizations over the next decade – and universities that invest in inter-disciplinary leadership research and education will obtain a significant competitive advantage over their peer institutions. Universities that adopt leadership as a strategic priority will produce cutting-edge best practices and programming to solve the major challenges facing our society and organizations.

University Collaboration

Currently, leadership development programming and research across Ohio State is siloed by individual units and college-specific efforts. Though there are fruitful areas of collaboration and much goodwill, such collaborations tend to be limited. This system-wide disconnect is felt by all audiences – from our students, faculty, and staff to organizations in our community. To combat this emergent leadership crisis, it is essential that our colleagues across the university come together to form a unified, interdisciplinary institute dedicated to the advancement of leadership at The Ohio State University.

This effort, initiated by leaders from Max M. Fisher College of Business, College of Education and Human Ecology, College of Food, Agriculture and Environmental Sciences, John Glenn College of Public Affairs, College of Arts and Sciences, and the Office of Student Life, aims to establish a world-class institute for leadership research and experiential leadership development – serving all students, faculty, and staff within the university.

Vision:

The cross-disciplinary leadership institute is the foremost catalyst for positive change in our rapidly evolving world, uniting faculty, staff, and students in transformative leadership development.

Mission:

The institute is dedicated to:

- Enhancing the capacity of faculty and staff to deliver effective and innovative leadership education
- Leveraging resources to foster collaboration for broader university impact
- Encouraging and sponsoring cross-disciplinary scholarship
- Highlighting all curricular and co-curricular leadership initiatives across campus
- Developing new, cross-curricular student leadership initiatives

Values:

- Excellence and Impact: We believe in creating a bold community of leaders who inspire others to take action and to utilize creativity, critical thinking and problem solving to have a lasting, positive impact on society.
- Diversity and Innovation: We believe in educating leaders who embrace diversity in all its forms and encourage innovative thinking through the integration of varied perspectives and backgrounds.
- Inclusion and Equity: We believe in promoting inclusive and equitable leadership and in providing support for faculty, staff, and students to teach, facilitate, and engage in courageous conversations on complex issues.
- Care and Compassion: We believe in the power of care and compassion in leadership, emphasizing the importance of empathy in understanding the intricacies of an interconnected world.
- Integrity and Respect: We believe in building trust through honesty, transparency, authenticity, and principled behavior.

How will we accomplish this?

- Establishing a platform or website to serve as a 'hub' of all leadership experiences and engagements at Ohio State that individual units can submit to
- Sponsoring research through grant writing support, funding, and expert consultation
- Hosting visiting leadership research scholars
- Hosting cross-disciplinary communities of practice amongst leadership educators and other professionals who support leadership learning
- Annual leadership 'new practices' conference to engage faculty, staff, students, and external stakeholders in learning about approaches to transformative leadership
- Connecting to outside funding

Resources Required

To execute the proposed mission of the institute, it will require a significant endowment to support operational and programmatic expenditures. We estimate that the institute will require a $25 million endowment gift, generating just over $1 million in annual revenue. The annual funds would be allocated as follows:

- $325,000 for 4 staff positions ($115,000 for director, $75,000 for two coordinators, $60,000 for assistant [all include a 35% benefit rate])
- $600,000 for each college/unit support
- $75,000 for direct expenses (office equipment, materials, utilities, travel, professional development)
- $150,000 for grants program to fund leadership research

Note: A physical location on-campus (renovated space in existing building, new building, etc.) and/or additional partners would add to the size of the ask.

Next Steps

This is at a general idea stage. If the premise of establishing a university leadership institute is agreed upon by all partners, next steps would include:

- Articulating more granular objectives that the institute would accomplish
- Outlining how those goals would be pursued
- Establishing how we would measure success toward those goals

Dear Dr. Smith,

I am writing in support of the College of Arts and Sciences proposal for development of the new interdisciplinary liberal arts major in Leadership Studies and inclusion of two courses from the College of Nursing. The central aim of the leadership major is to provide students the opportunity to engage deeply with the liberal arts and acquire the knowledge, contexts, and skills to rise into leadership roles wherever their careers may take them. The courses from the College of Nursing will be placed in T2, the Leadership in Society specialization, and they will be included in T2.C, the Health Leadership pathway.

I have reviewed the courses relevant to this new major and agree to the following additions:

HW2102	Evidence-based Strategies to Optimize Health, Happiness and Well-being

RE: Concurrence – *Leadership Studies

Thank you for the opportunity to review the proposal written and submitted by faculty from across the College of Arts and Sciences to develop and launch an interdisciplinary liberal arts undergraduate major in Leadership Studies. On behalf of the College of Public Health, please accept this memo to document our enthusiastic support of your proposed degree program in Leadership Studies. This program does not conflict with any program presently offered by the College of Public Health. In addition, we acknowledge the need for the program and anticipate high demand from among undergraduate students.

We wish you success receiving favorable votes for approval.

Subject: Request for ROTC-Air Force Concurrence, ASC Major in Leadership Studies

Dear Kevin,

I am writing on behalf of a group of faculty from across the College of Arts & Sciences to request your unit's concurrence for a new interdisciplinary liberal arts major in Leadership Studies.

The central aim of the Leadership major is to provide OSU students the opportunity to engage deeply with principles of leadership through the liberal arts and acquire the knowledge, contexts, and skills to rise into leadership roles wherever their careers may take them. With courses from 28 ASC units and several external partners (e.g. College of Nursing, College of Public Health, and College of Education and Human Ecology), the Leadership major is highly interdisciplinary. We have also designed it to be flexible, as well as rigorous, as we expect a significant number of students will choose it as a second major.

The curriculum includes four required courses that approach leadership from different disciplinary perspectives; a menu of skills courses; a set of six thematic specialization (students choose three courses from one specialization – as we have discussed, Military and Security Studies is one option); and a senior capstone seminar. Two of the four core courses have been designed specifically for the major, while the skills and thematic specializations encourage students to explore the breadth and depth of the Arts and Sciences. We have also designed the major to incentivize student engagement with meaningful co-curricular activities, such as ROTC deployment.

You can find additional information about the major in the attached proposal and curricular spreadsheet.

We hope that you will be willing to provide a concurrence within the next two weeks. OAA rules stipulate that a concurrence will be assumed if there is no response within two weeks of the request. That said, please do let me know if you require additional time to confer with your colleagues prior to responding. Please also don't hesitate to let me know if you have any questions, or if you would like any additional information.

Dr. Scott Levi,

I unequivocally support this effort and incredibly grateful for the work your team has done to make all this happen and ensure we were included as part of the specializations available!

Separately, now that school is winding down, I'd like to try to find some time to meet with you and discuss future opportunities if you have time in the next couple of weeks prior to me heading down to Fort Knox on 29 May to train Cadets until the middle of the summer.

Thank you again,
Mike

On behalf of the Sports and Society Initiative, it is my honor to provide this letter of concurrence in support of the interdisciplinary liberal arts major in Leadership Studies.

I believe that the Sports Leadership pathway is an important option for students and it is a strong compliment to the work we are doing in SSI. This major and pathway will allow us to connect the academic elements of our work across important and additional areas within Arts and Sciences.

I look forward to engaging more with this effort.

VIII. Letter of Non-Concurrence from College of Education and Human Ecology; Fisher College of Business; College of Food, Agricultural, and Environmental Sciences; John Glenn College of Public Affairs

Re: Letter of Non-Concurrence for Arts and Sciences Leadership Studies Undergraduate Degree

I. Overview

In the 1940s, the Ohio State University established an international reputation in the study of leadership. Ohio State faculty (notably Ralph Stodgill in the Division of Administrative Sciences, a precursor to the Fisher College of Business) advanced leadership scholarship by moving research beyond the identifiable traits of leaders to examining their behaviors. From the 1940s through the 1980s, Ohio State was a frontrunner in the field.

Over time, Ohio State lost the mantle of being a pioneer as academic programming around leadership fractured across the University.

There are now multiple faculty who study leadership and long-standing undergraduate and graduate degree programs that prepare students for leadership roles in the Fisher College of Business; the College of Food, Agriculture, and Environmental Sciences; the College of Education and Human Ecology; and the John Glenn College of Public Affairs. There are also discipline-specific leadership programs in many other colleges on campus (e.g., the College of Nursing offers leadership programming for nursing). In addition, the Office of Student Life offers an array of experiential programs that cultivate and develop leadership skills for undergraduates.

On the one hand, this proliferation of leadership programming creates multiple opportunities for students to find a pathway to study leadership and develop leadership skills. On the other hand, there is considerable duplication and overlap among these programs; students are often confused about where they should pursue leadership academic programming. In addition, the whole is less than the sum of the parts since, until recently, the faculty in these areas have been scattered rather than connected.

The potential entry of Arts and Sciences into this crowded landscape is exciting. There are bodies of research and scholarship in Arts and Sciences that have much to offer the study and practice of leadership (e.g., history, philosophy, and psychology). The interest of faculty from these fields and others in Arts and Sciences is a welcome addition to the leadership assets at Ohio State.

The risk, however, is that the creation of another leadership degree will further splinter an already crowded landscape; duplicate existing curricula; cause more confusion for students rather than less; and undermine collaborative efforts designed to integrate the different leadership assets.

This memo records the non-concurrence of four colleges – the Fisher College of Business; the College of Education and Human Ecology; the College of Food, Agriculture, and Environmental Sciences; and the John Glenn College of Public Affairs – to the College of Arts and Sciences proposed undergraduate major in Leadership Studies. These colleges, along with the Office of Student Life, have been engaged in a long-running effort to develop multi-college undergraduate leadership curricula.

The opportunity to distinguish Ohio State from its peers is through collaboration rather than further fragmentation. As this memo describes, there is a collaborative effort underway that would benefit from the participation of Arts and Sciences.

This memo provides background on the multi-college collaborative effort and documents areas of concern in the proposed Arts and Sciences major.

II. Multi-College Collaborative Effort to Create a Distinctive Ohio State Approach to Leadership Curricula

For almost a decade, the Office of Academic Affairs under Vice Provost for Academic Programming Randy Smith has convened a working group on leadership curricular and co-curricular programming that has included representation from multiple colleges and the Office of Student Life. The intent of this working group has been to share knowledge about the leadership offerings of each of the respective units and build collaborative partnerships. Initially the focus of these collaborative conversations was around a long-standing minor – Leadership Studies Minor – offered through CFAES. Many colleges participate in the delivery of this minor, including Arts and Sciences.

Just before the pandemic, conversations focused on developing a leadership curricular program that would:

- distinguish the Ohio State University from its peers;
- draw on the strengths of units from across campus;
- reduce the proliferation of leadership curricula in an already crowded landscape of leadership curricular and co-curricular offerings across the university;
- be rooted in research on the practice of leadership and leadership pedagogy; and
- include an experiential component that allowed students to develop and practice leadership skills.

Representatives from the Ohio State University Foundation also participated in these conversations because of the opportunity for a university-wide collaborative effort. Foundation representatives indicated that potential transformative philanthropic investments were possible so long as a truly collaborative and distinctive offering was created. As a result, leadership was one of two university-wide thematic areas included in the planning of the Time and Change fundraising campaign.

The COVID-19 pandemic paused these collaborative conversations as each academic unit pivoted to focus on ensuring students could successfully navigate through existing degree programs. These collaborative conversations restarted in the fall of 2022. At this time, the College of Arts and Sciences announced that it had developed a degree proposal in leadership studies.

This news was greeted with excitement by the colleges that had long-standing investments in leadership research, teaching, and service as the College of Arts and Sciences had historically shown little interest in this area of scholarship. Arts and Sciences has much to offer the study and teaching of leadership, particularly the disciplines of history, philosophy, and psychology. The developers of this proposal are to be credited with igniting interest in leadership across many Arts and Sciences departments.

At the same time, there was considerable disappointment. Rather than join the effort to build a university-wide collaboration that draws on strengths across the university, the College of Arts and Sciences had opted to develop its own degree program. This runs counter to the conversations that have occurred in the committee Randy Smith chairs, of which Arts and Sciences has long been a participant. All four colleges represented in this memo were surprised to learn of the proposal as Arts and Sciences had not mentioned the possibility in previous meetings of this committee.

The deans of the Fisher College, the Glenn College, and the College of Food, Agriculture, and Environmental Sciences, along with leadership from Student Life, met with the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences to invite Arts and Sciences to collaborate in a pan-university effort that could position the University as offering a distinctively OSU-approach to leadership teaching and research. The dean of the College of Arts and Sciences responded that interdisciplinarity already existed in the Arts and Sciences proposal through the participation of multiple Arts and Sciences' departments, and that building a liberal arts approach to leadership studies would be sufficiently distinctive relative to offerings at other universities. Arts and Sciences opted to move forward on its own.

Four colleges – Fisher, Glenn, FAES, EHE – and the Office of Student Life are continuing to pursue the goals of the OAA leadership committee. A working group composed of representatives from each of these units is currently developing undergraduate leadership curricula that draws on the strengths of the colleges involved (e.g., private, public, community, and student engagement), is rooted in the research on leadership, and will incorporate experiential learning. This proposal will be ready for review in the fall of 2023.

III. Proposal Concerns

- The proposal duplicates existing offerings
The proposal duplicates existing offerings, proliferating more leadership programs across campus rather than collaboratively integrating strengths in different colleges. Students will be confused by the entry of another leadership offering on campus, particularly when the proposal uses a title which is an exact duplicate of an existing curricular offering, the Leadership Studies minor in CFAES. A potential fix to the titling issue is to align the title more closely to the purported distinctiveness of the major, its liberal arts approach (e.g., “leadership from a liberal arts perspective” or “leadership in the liberal arts”).
- The proposal does not clearly articulate the liberal arts perspective and how this perspective differs from the pedagogical approach of existing offerings
The proposal repeatedly claims that the liberal arts perspective offers something unique and different from existing offerings on campus without ever explicitly explaining the liberal arts approach. The proposal describes the imperatives of leadership, the need for interdisciplinarity, a grounding in ethics, the ability to make decisions under conditions of uncertainty, and weigh the competing values present in the diversity of leadership contexts. All these dimensions are standard components of existing degree programs on campus (we would be happy to detail how these elements are present in the leadership curricular programs in the relevant professional colleges).

We think that there is tremendous value in drawing on the expertise of faculty in the liberal arts. The field of history can draw on the extensive historical experience of leaders across time and contexts to draw generalizable lessons. The field of philosophy can help students understand the values that guide moral leadership. The field of psychology can provide insight into bias and decision-making with imperfect information. And there are clearly lessons to draw from many other liberal arts disciplines.

What’s missing from the proposal is how the insights from these different disciplines integrate into a coherent liberal arts approach. The reference to the Jepsen School shows that another university has invested in a liberal arts approach but offers little explanation of what the core principles are in this approach that is distinctively liberal arts.

How do the three required courses create the liberal arts approach? Is the distinctive advantage of the proposed degree its roots in history, philosophy, and women, gender and sexuality studies? If so, this begs for more explanation connected to clearly articulated liberal arts learning objectives. The same is true for the practice of leadership course list. What is the liberal arts approach to the practice of leadership and how do these proposed courses advance those learning objectives (e.g., how does a course in organizational psychology allow students to practice leadership)? Similarly, there is no explanation of how the tracks and elective courses are connected to the core. The creators of the proposal are to be credited with drawing in expertise from a dizzying array of disciplines across the college, but the proposal currently reads as a grab-bag of offerings (with well over 450 courses) rather than an integrated degree with clear learning objectives connected to the liberal arts leadership core.

- The effectiveness of the purported goals in the proposal are undefined

There are no evaluative criteria in the proposal. The proposal notes that leadership is a skill but does not show any evidence of the voluminous literature on how the effectiveness of skill training can be demonstrated. The inability to assess whether students become more skilled leaders because of this major undermines the justification for the major.

The proposal could be strengthened by drawing on this research and establishing clear criteria for assessing student learning.

- The proposal does not evidence a science-based approach to learning leadership skills and the skill pathways are not linked to the core curriculum

There is extensive literature on how individuals learn leadership skills (see in particular the systematic reviews and meta-analyses of Lacerenza et al., 2019 and Reyes et al., 2019). Extant research finds that informational approaches to learning leadership skills are ineffective, and that student reflection and reactions are a superficial means of demonstrating leadership skills development. This is the essential nature of the proposed degree.

One alternative is to root leadership skill acquisition in experiential opportunities explicitly linked to the curricular program. Another pathway is to work directly with the relevant professional colleges to develop skills courses that connect directly to the liberal arts approach. A third alternative is to eliminate skill acquisition and development and focus the degree on the study of leadership.

- The proposal would benefit from an integrated partnership with the professional colleges

An earlier version of the proposal included many courses from the professional colleges as electives and skills courses, but they were not explicitly connected to learning objectives. At the request of the professional colleges, these courses have now been removed. There are two tracks, though, that remain in the proposal that are duplicative of offerings in the professional colleges – track 3 on business is duplicative of Fisher offerings and track 6 in environment is duplicative of School of Environment and Natural Resources/CFAES offerings.

One option is to remove these tracks. The better option, in our view, is to work collaboratively to develop an undergraduate offering where the strengths of the respective colleges could be harnessed into a distinctive Ohio State offering. These two tracks are examples of how a collaboration with the relevant professional colleges could be enriched by a multidisciplinary liberal arts and professional approach. The working group is in place to create such an offering and Arts and Sciences is welcome to join.

October 30, 2023

We would like to thank the Subcommittee for their thoughtful suggestions for the Leadership Major Proposal. Below we have listed the Subcommittee's feedback, along with short descriptions of how we have revised the proposal.

A. Comment

The Subcommittee would like to commend the ASC Leadership Major Steering Committee for their work on the proposal and is excited to see curricular development in the Arts and Sciences in this arena.

B. Contingency

The Subcommittee requests that the department de-emphasize the double major throughout the proposal. While the Subcommittee appreciates the flexibility of the program and recognizes that double majoring could be beneficial to students, such a strong emphasis on this undermines the program by suggesting that it cannot stand on its own. The Subcommittee asks that the Steering Committee provide more information on how students will be prepared for careers and/or graduate school upon completion of this program alone, giving special attention to named career fields such as science, technology, and the arts that may require specialized knowledge in the field.

- We have removed references to the double major and added language to address the issue above (page 4).
- We have recategorized the skills courses to fall directly under the specialization, as to make clear that the skills courses are also a part of the specialization category (page 3, 15-16).

C. Contingency

The Subcommittee requests that the Steering Committee elaborate more on the cohesion of students' paths within the major given the broad scope of the program. The Subcommittee again appreciates the vast appeal this program will have but has the following questions regarding how students will articulate the value of their studies:

- i. With so many specializations to choose from, such a huge variety of courses in the Specializations and Skills, and some choice in the Core, how will students in the major have a common experience and a full command of the key concepts and skills of leadership studies?
- ii. How will students keep a focus on leadership skills while navigating the wide variety of Specializations and Skills courses before they get to the capstone course?

iii. How will students be guided through the process of choosing courses to create a cohesive program of study?

- We have added a Portfolio component to the major requirements, which responds to the Subcommittee's questions above and makes a valuable contribution to the major more generally (page 3-4. 14-15). The portfolio will:
 - o Enable students to curate a cohesive personal curriculum as they plan for their future careers;
 - o Better position students to plan for a common experience and focus on leadership as they work through the various components of the major;
 - o Integrate experiential learning with coursework experiences;
 - o Create opportunities to develop essential skills, such as writing, critical thinking, and self-reflection;
 - o Generate a cohesive reflection of students' individual coursework as they move into the professional and/or post-graduate world.

D. Contingency

The Subcommittee asks that the department modify the advising sheet (proposal Appendix 2) concerning counting Leadership major courses toward another major program. The Subcommittee strongly recommends that the advising sheet refer students to their academic advisor regarding crossing courses between majors. However, should the Steering Committee feel strongly about stating the possibility of crossing courses between majors on the advising sheet, the Subcommittee asks that the advising sheet at least acknowledge that cross-counting courses requires the approval of both departments.

- We have added language to the advising sheet indicating that cross-counting courses requires the approval of both departments.

E. Contingency

e. Contingency: The Subcommittee asks that the sample four-year plan (Appendix III) be revised with the following corrections:

- i. The four-year plan should not overlap with another program, but should demonstrate progression through courses in the major, General Education, and electives coursework of students enrolled in the leadership program alone. Therefore, references to the History major should be removed.
- ii. The plan is missing the required First Year Survey course, Arts and Sciences 1100.xx, which must be taken in students' first semester.
- iii. The GEN Launch Seminar is recommended to be taken in students' second semester unless requirements in the major prohibit them from doing so.
- iv. Ideally, students should take the Reflections seminar in AU4 or SP3 rather than in their last semester.
- v. Introductory World Language courses [1101-1103] (AU1, SP1, AU2) are four credit hours and should be described that way in the plan. The four-year plan includes a 4th course, but there is no 4th World Language course in the GEN (or GEL). Additionally, these courses should preferably be labeled as World Language College Requirements as technically they are not part of the General Education program at the university.

- vi. The Embedded Literacies (Advanced Writing, Data Analysis, and Technology) are not part of the General Education and should not be labeled as such (SP1, SP4).
- vii. Since the Subcommittee is requesting that the sample four-year plan reflect the path of a student with only one major, no GEN Foundations courses can be crossed with the major.

- We have made these changes to the sample four-year plan.

F. Contingency

The Subcommittee asks that the Steering Committee reconsider and/or reconfigure the co-curricular option for completing the “Skills” section of the major in one of two ways. The Subcommittee strongly suggests that instead of an ungraded Option B a new ASC experiential learning course be created to avoid some of the issues listed below and provide enhanced structure:

1. It is clear that the Steering Committee anticipates that many students in the program will double major. Given this, a student could potentially complete a service learning or internship course for credit towards another major and then could also count this toward the non-credit hour requirement for the Leadership major. The Subcommittee is concerned that this would allow students to cross an additional course/requirement between programs, which could potentially violate university rules on the matter.

2. The Subcommittee commends the Steering Committee for its strong value of experiential learning but is uncertain that all listed options will provide an equal experience. The Subcommittee asks how experiential learning will be verified and completed to a universal standard. Will the Steering Committee include a reflection or self-report?

- We are replacing option B with the addition of a new ASC Leadership Experiential Learning course (ASC 3192), which students can take for their co-curricular option (page 3).
- The Portfolio will include a section for the Experiential Learning course, which will create more opportunities for reflection, as well as link experiential learning with the major’s goals and the student’s experience as a whole (page 4).

G. Recommendation

The Subcommittee recommends that the Steering Committee re-organize the layout of the Advising Sheet (Appendix II). Specifically, they encourage the Steering Committee to combine the sections that are currently listed in the “Skills” section and the “Specialization” section into one “Specialization” section with two subsections labeled “Skills Courses” and “Content Courses” or something similar. The Subcommittee is concerned that its current layout suggests a certain order to the courses and does not demonstrate that Skills courses correspond with the Specialization courses in the next column.

- We have re-organized the structure of the Curriculum to make both the skills and content courses fall under the Thematic Specializations, and to make the connection between them more obvious. The advising sheet has been modified to reflect this change.

H. Comment

The Subcommittee finds the assessment plan to be well considered and thoroughly explained, but offers the friendly advice to, moving forward, consider staffing and the necessary faculty time commitments for implementation given the Steering Committee's high enrollment projections.

- We have noted in the proposal our intention to add more staff as the program grows (page 17).
- We also anticipate that the addition of a student portfolio will make the assessment process more organized and efficient.

I. Contingency

The Subcommittee asks that the Steering Committee provide specific information about the planned for (or, when applicable, current) frequency of core course offerings.

- We have added language about offering frequency to the proposal. Departments plan to offer core courses at least once a year, and then will increase frequency in response to the growth of the major (page 2).

J. Contingency

The Subcommittee asks that the Steering Committee remove all 1000-level courses listed throughout the major program course options as 1000-level courses cannot count towards a major.

- We have removed all 1000-level courses from the curriculum.

K. Contingency

The Subcommittee asks that the Steering Committee alter their plan for allowing a student to use up to 9 credit hours from the Hospitality and Retail Leadership Certificate in their ASC Leadership major (pg. 5 of the proposal). As of right now, the HRLC certificate only allows for 50% of the 12 required credit hours to overlap with any other major, minor or certificate, so students who complete both programs could only overlap 6 credit hours.

- We have altered this to 6 credit hours (page 6).

L. Contingency

The Subcommittee asks that the Steering Committee correct the title for CSFRST/CSHSPMG 3910 to "Customer Experience Management" (proposal pg. 4).

- We have made this change (page 6).

M. Recommendation

The Subcommittee recommends that the Steering Committee include a Communication course in the "Core" Section of the major rather than in the "Skills" Section, as this seems to be an essential area of study for leadership. Moving this requirement to the core could also help to provide a more consistent and cohesive program addressed in item "c" above.

Program Learning Goals

Note: these are required for all undergraduate degree programs and majors now, and will be required for all graduate and professional degree programs in 2012. Nonetheless, all programs are encouraged to complete these now.

Program Learning Goals

- Students examine historical and contemporary paradigms of leadership and analyze them according to the theories and principles of modern leadership studies.
- Students analyze and critique historical and contemporary leadership scenarios based on ethical principles reflecting diverse cultural perspectives.
- Students analyze and critique the roles leaders and leadership play in hindering or advancing social justice.
- Students apply a range of leadership tools, tactics, and styles in an ethical, equitable, and efficacious manner.
- Students meaningfully engage with principle themes and ideas of the student's chosen specialization and forge connections that integrate leadership studies within the context of their field.

Assessment

Assessment plan includes student learning goals, how those goals are evaluated, and how the information collected is used to improve student learning. An assessment plan is required for undergraduate majors and degrees. Graduate and professional degree programs are encouraged to complete this now, but will not be required to do so until 2012.

Is this a degree program (undergraduate, graduate, or professional) or major proposal? Yes

Does the degree program or major have an assessment plan on file with the university Office of Academic Affairs? No

DIRECT MEASURES (means of assessment that measure performance directly, are authentic and minimize mitigating or intervening factors)

Classroom assignments

- Embedded testing (i.e. specific questions in homework or exams that allow faculty to assess students' attainments of a specific learning goal)
- Other classroom assessment methods (e.g., writing assignments, oral presentations, oral exams)

Evaluation of a body of work produced by the student

- Capstone course reports, papers, or presentations

INDIRECT MEASURES (means of assessment that are related to direct measures but are steps removed from those measures)Surveys and Interviews

- Student survey
- Alumni survey
- Student evaluation of instruction
- Student interviews or focus groups

Additional types of indirect evidence

- Curriculum or syllabus review
- Grade review

USE OF DATA (how the program uses or will use the evaluation data to make evidence-based improvements to the program periodically)

- Meet with students directly to discuss their performance
- Analyze and discuss trends with the unit's faculty
- Analyze and report to college/school
- Make improvements in curricular requirements (e.g., add, subtract courses)
- Make improvements in course content
- Make improvements in course delivery and learning activities within courses
- Periodically confirm that current curriculum and courses are facilitating student attainment of program goals
- Benchmark against best programs in the field

Program Specializations/Sub-Plans

If you do not specify a program specialization/sub-plan it will be assumed you are submitting this program for all program specializations/sub-plans.

Pre-Major

Does this Program have a Pre-Major? No

- We agree with the Subcommittee that Communication courses provide an essential area of study for Leadership majors, but we find it necessary to keep the Communication courses in the Skills section. We have therefore added a requirement that all majors must take at least one of the Communication Skills courses (page 3).
- We have also added language about the importance of Communication skills (page 2).

N. Recommendation

The Subcommittee recommends that the Steering Committee remove the reference to “good standing” (proposal pg. 14) and instead state that the major program is open to all students at Ohio State if there are no GPA requirements or admittance criteria.

- We have removed this language from the proposal (page 16).
